1 MR. SHECHTMAN: Thank you, Judge.
2 DIRECT EXAMINATION
3 BY MR. SHECHTMAN:
4 Q. Mr. Schoeman, how are you employed?
5 A. I'm a lawyer at Kramer, Levin, Naftalis & Frankel.
6 Q. You're a partner there?
7 A. I am.
8 Q. How long have you been practicing law?
9 A. I graduated from law school in 1995. I first started at 10 Kramer Levin in 2003. I left there in 2007 to return to the 11 U.S. Attorney's office in the Eastern District of New York, and 12 I returned back to Kramer Levin in the fall of 2009.
13 Q. Were you a lawyer in this courtroom during the trial of 14 David Parse and other defendants?
15 A. I was.
16 Q. Whom did you and your firm represent?
17 A. We represented Raymond Craig Brubaker.
18 Q. What other members -- what other partners, let's keep it
19 simple, at your firm were involved in that trial?
20 A. Barry Berke. My partner Barry Berke tried the case with 21 me.
22 Q. Let me direct your attention, if you would, to May 11,
23 2011, and ask you, did the Court that day, that afternoon, read
24 aloud a note from Juror No. 1, Catherine Conrad?
25 A. I believe that's the correct date if that is the date on

- 1 which we concluded the summations in the case, yes.
2 Q. Do you recall the subject matter of that note?
3 A. I recall in general that there was a question regarding 4 respondeat superior.
5 Q. Again just to be clear, what stage was the trial at?
6 A. I believe that that was after all of the summations had
7 been concluded, I think including the rebuttal summation.
8 Q. Do you know a lawyer named Theresa Trzaskoma?
9 A. I do.
10 Q. How do you know her?
11 A. I think I first met Ms. Trzaskoma in approximately 2,000.
12 My babysitter and her babysitter became friends. Being a 13 first- time parent, I did a little diligence on the parents of 14 my 3 month old's playmate and learned that it was Ms. Trzaskoma
15 and her husband. We became family friends at that point.
16 Q. I'm loathe to ask this question, but you Googled her?
17 A. Actually, I think I knew her husband, who had been an 18 associate with me at Paul Weiss and had clerked in the Eastern 19 District at the same time that my wife had clerked. So I think 20 I knew them in advance.
21 Q. Was Ms. Trzaskoma also a lawyer during the course of the 22 trial in this courtroom, the David Parse trial?
23 A. She was.
24 Q. Who did she and her firm represent?
25 A. She and her firm represented David Parse.

- 1 Q. Sometime after the reading of the note from Juror No. 1,
2 did you speak to Ms. Trzaskoma about Ms. Conrad, Juror No. 1?
3 A. Yes.
4 Q. Would you tell the Court what was said between you and Ms.
5 Trzaskoma at that time.
6 A. Yes. I recall that we had a conversation. I believe it
7 was as we were walking across Foley Square towards Duane
8 Street. She told me that there was a person with the same name
9 as -- I don't recall whether she said Juror No. 1 or Ms.
10 Conrad, but a person with the same name who was a disbarred
11 lawyer but that it was not the same person as Juror No. 1.
12 I began formulating a question to say, how do you
13 know? She anticipated that question and said, because of the 14 voir dire. I began formulating the question of, what question
15 during the voir dire would have disclosed that? She 16 anticipated that question as I was speaking it and said
17 something to the effect that her educational background did not 18 include law school. I said, then it's not the same person?
19 And she said right. By that time we had finished crossing the 20 street.
21 Q. Any further discussion about Juror No. 1?
22 A. Not with Ms. Trzaskoma during that time period.
23 Q. Any further discussion with anyone at the Brune firm
24 regarding Juror No. 1 during that time period?
25 A. No.

1 Q. Did you take any action based on that conversation?

2 A. No.

3 Q. We know that it was after the juror's note. Do you recall
4 when it was?

5 A. I can't say exactly when it was. I believe it was during 6 the deliberations either that Friday or sometime the following
7 week.

8 MR. SHECHTMAN: No further questions.

9 THE COURT: Cross-examination?

10 MR. OKULA: Briefly, your Honor.

11 CROSS-EXAMINATION

12 BY MR. OKULA:

13 Q. Good afternoon, Mr. Schoeman. How are you?

14 A. Good, thank you. Good afternoon.

15 Q. Dr. DeRosa sends his regards?

16 A. I send mine right back.

17 Q. You said you had this conversation with Ms. Trzaskoma after 18 the note was received in court, is that correct?

19 A. Yes.

20 Q. Was it the same day or the following day?

21 A. I don't believe it was either the same day or the following
22 day. I believe it was sometime a couple of days or several 23 days later.

24 Q. You talked about the follow-up questions that you asked to 25 try to get to the bottom of the information, is that correct?

- 1 A. Yes.
2 Q. That's what any good lawyer or investigator does when
3 somebody tells them a broad fact; you ask what supports that,
4 correct?
5 A. It's the question I asked.
6 Q. Do you disagree with my proposition that a good
7 investigator or lawyer, when somebody gives them a broad
8 proposition, asks the follow-up question, what is that based 9 on?
10 A. I don't disagree with it.
11 Q. Did you ask Ms. Trzaskoma what had led her to conclude or 12 what led to her belief that there was a possible connection
13 between Juror No. 1 and the suspended attorney?
14 A. I think she told me that there was someone with the same
15 name as Juror No. 1. I don't recall whether we actually used
16 the person's name. Then, as I described, I asked questions
17 about why she had determined it was not the same person, and 18 the answer was based on the voir dire responses.
19 Q. Is it correct that you didn't ask any other follow-up
20 questions that led to her initial belief that there was a
21 connection between Juror No. 1 and the suspended attorney?
22 A. I think all she told me was that they had the same name,
23 and I inferred that that was the basis of her considering it
24 possible that they were the same person.
25 Q. Did she tell you that they had the same middle initials?

- 1 A. No.
2 Q. Did she tell you that she had viewed a Westlaw report that
3 had certain information on it that was connected to Juror No.
4 1, Catherine Conrad?
5 A. No.
6 Q. Did she tell you that she had communicated with somebody
7 internally in her firm where she had exclaimed, "Jesus, I think
8 Juror No. 1 is the suspended attorney"?
9 A. No.
10 Q. If you had that information from Theresa Trzaskoma, would 11 you have done further investigation yourself?
12 A. I don't know.
13 Q. How many years did you spend as an Assistant U.S. Attorney,
14 Mr. Schoeman?
15 A. A total of about seven or eight.
16 Q. I would stipulate to the fact, because I've heard it, that 17 you were a terrific investigator, correct?
18 A. I'll stipulate with you.
19 Q. Are you telling us really that you wouldn't have looked 20 into that further yourself if you had seen these further
21 connections tying Juror No. 1 to the suspended attorney?
22 A. Forgive me. I thought your question was if I had heard
23 that she had written an email that had that exclamation. I
24 don't know what I would have done. I guess I can only tell you
25 what I did do, which was ask about the voir dire.

- 1 Q. Would you have liked to receive that information in order
- 2 to make a better assessment of your own about whether Juror No.
- 3 1 was the suspended attorney? After all, more information is
- 4 better, isn't it?
- 5 A. It did not occur to me at the time to ask for more
- 6 information.
- 7 Q. I didn't ask you whether it occurred to you at the time.
- 8 Would you have wanted more information? Would that have helped
- 9 your analysis?
- 10 A. I don't know whether it would have helped my analysis. I
- 11 concluded from the fact that she was telling me that the voir
- 12 dire answer had said that this person had not gone to law
- 13 school, that this was not an issue.
- 14 Q. Do you really mean what you just said, that you don't think
- 15 more information would have helped your analysis, Mr. Schoeman?
- 16 A. I'm telling you I don't know whether more information would
- 17 have helped my analysis. I'm telling you that I reached a
- 18 conclusion based on that information.
- 19 Q. Would you agree with me that if you have two people, one
- 20 named Catherine Conrad, another named Catherine Conrad, and you
- 21 were given information about their middle initials, that they
- 22 share the same middle initial, that it made it statistically
- 23 more likely that was the same person?
- 24 A. Yes.

4 Q. Mr. Schoeman, just to be clear, on May 13th or sometime
5 thereafter Ms. Trzaskoma told you that she had rejected the 6 conclusion that Juror No. 1 was a suspended attorney, is that 7 correct?

8 A. Yes.

9 MR. SHECHTMAN: Very good.

10 MR. OKULA: Nothing else, your Honor.

11 THE COURT: Mr. Schoeman, did you get any 12 understanding from Ms. Trzaskoma as to why it was that she was 13 sharing this information or her deliberative process with you?

14 THE WITNESS: I didn't have an understanding. We,
15 having spent many months of trial together, often shared
16 information. It was consistent with our pattern of sharing
17 information during the course of the trial. But I have 18 described I think the entirety of the conversation.

9 Q. Mr. Berke, how are you employed?

10 A. I am a partner at Kramer, Levin, Naftalis & Frankel.

11 Q. How long have you been a partner at that firm?

12 A. I have been a partner at that firm since I believe 2001.

13 Q. Prior to that were you involved in the law --

14 A. I'm sorry. Since 1999 I was a partner there. Prior to 15 that I was an associate at Kramer Levin.

16 Q. Prior to that?

17 A. Prior to that I began my career as a clerk in this 18 courthouse for a judge here. I was then at the Federal 19 Defenders office in the Southern District of New York until 20 1995, when I joined Kramer Levin. I had a brief period when I
21 was a visiting associate professor at NYU teaching courses
22 there right in between.

23 Q. Were you a lawyer in this courtroom during the trial of

1 Q. Whom did you and your firm represent?
2 A. We represented Craig Brubaker.
3 Q. Let me direct your attention to May 11th of 2011. Did the 4 Court that afternoon read a note from Juror No. 1, Catherine
5 Conrad?
6 A. I recall that.
7 Q. Do you recall the subject matter of that note?
8 A. I recall generally that there was a note from Juror 1
9 asking whether the judge was going to instruct I believe on 10 respondeat superior. I think there were some other things, but 11 I recall that to be the overall gist of the note, as I recall 12 it.
13 Q. Do you know a lawyer named Susan Brune?
14 A. I do.
15 Q. How do you know her?
16 A. I've known Ms. Brune for a long time. I can tell you the 17 background, but I certainly know her as counsel for David Parse
18 in this action.
19 Q. Sometime after the judge's reading of that note from Juror
20 No. 1, did you speak to Ms. Brune about Ms. Conrad?
21 A. I did. I'll tell you what I recall. I recall that after 22 we heard the note that day, I believe it was the following
23 day -- although I can't say that with a hundred percent
24 certainty, it could have been the day after that -- I recall 25 being in the witness room in the back, which we used and had

1 copy machines and other things and often spent time back there,
2 I remember talking to Ms. Brune about the note.

3 I recall her saying that they had identified a person
4 with the same name who had been a disbarred lawyer. I recall
5 saying to her, well, that can't be, because she certainly isn't
6 a lawyer. I said, I assume she was asked what her educational 7 background was. I remember Ms. Brune said she did, she was 8 asked, she said that she had a BA degree. Ms. Brune told me
9 what it was in. I don't recall as I sit here. But it was some 10 humanities. I recall saying, well, definitely it can't be the 11 same person. She said, that's what I think as well.

12 That was really the end of it. I would say the 13 conversation probably did not last more than two, three minutes
14 at most. Then I recall we left the room and that was it.

15 Q. She said, that's what I think as well?

16 A. That's what I recall.

17 MR. SHECHTMAN: No further questions.

18 THE COURT: Cross-examination.

22 A. Good afternoon, Mr. Okula.

1 forms a belief that a juror has engaged in misconduct, that
2 attorney is obligated to bring the misconduct to the attention
3 of the Court?

4 A. You're asking me an ethical question, a legal opinion. I
5 will tell you this --

6 Q. Can you not answer that yes or no, Mr. Berke?

7 A. Well, I'd like --

8 Q. I'm asking you a question, and I'll repeat it again. Maybe 9 you can't answer it yes or no; tell me if that's the case. If 10 an attorney forms a belief that a juror has engaged in 11 misconduct, do you believe that the attorney has an obligation
12 to bring it to the attention of the court?

13 A. I can't answer that yes or no. I can answer it, but I just 14 can't answer it yes or no.

15 Q. Really? You can't answer that question yes or no? That's 16 your testimony?

17 A. That's not how I would answer that question.

18 Q. Tell us how you would answer that question.

19 A. I will tell you that I have never confronted that issue at 20 trial in any trial I have done; that whenever I have an issue
21 that I think raises an ethical issue, I always do the same
22 thing. I always look to the ethics rules. I always look to 23 the ethics commentary.

24 I'm very familiar with the ethical rules. I'm 25 familiar with my obligations to my client, to the court, my

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

1 other obligations. I never will act on a piece of information
2 that I think invokes my duties as an advocate for my client as 3 well as an officer of the court without first looking at the 4 rules. I will read the rules.
5 As we all know, at times you will read the rules, they
6 will be absolutely clear what my obligations are. Sometimes
7 they will be less clear and we will research it. That's what I
8 do. I never act on information until I do that, and I've never 9 done that on that issue. That's what I can tell you.
10 Q. I don't think you answered my question, though. Can you
11 answer the question that I asked? If you form a belief as an 12 attorney in a courtroom that a juror has engaged in misconduct,
13 do you have to bring that to the attention of the court?
14 A. What I can tell you is if I had confronted that issue --
15 Q. Is this another one that you can't answer yes or no?
16 A. I'm going to answer your question.
17 Q. Would you do that.
18 A. I will. What I will tell you is my reaction to that 19 information if I confronted it would be that I believe I have 20 an obligation to tell the court. Before I did anything,
21 though, I would do exactly what I said. I would look at the 22 rule, look at the law, and make sure I was complying with all
23 my obligations.
24 Q. Did Susan Brune explain to you why she felt it important to 25 bring the information to your attention that her firm had

1 learned about the juror or believed or the connection between 2 the juror?
3 A. No. I think I have told you the substance of what I recall
4 of that conversation.
5 Q. She didn't explain in any fashion why she thought it was 6 important to tell you at that period of time?
7 A. No.
8 Q. Did she tell you anything else that her firm had learned
9 that gave rise to the belief by one of their attorneys that 10 there was a connection between Juror No. 1 and the suspended
11 New York attorney?
12 A. No.
13 Q. Did she tell you any of the underlying facts?
14 A. No. The only other thing that I recall is that when 15 talking about the note, we both noted that we believed that 16 Juror 1 had said she had been a plaintiff in a personal injury
17 case, which might explain the respondeat superior. I can't say
18 for certain it was in that identical conversation, I believe it
19 was probably was, but I do remember talking about that as well.
20 Q. Let me ask you this. If you had learned from somebody at 21 the Brune firm that they had a written report showing somebody
22 named Catherine Conrad had a personal injury or had a private 23 lawsuit, would that be a piece of information that you would 24 want to have had at the time in order to do your own analysis?
25 A. Just to be clear, what I'm referring to, I believe the

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

C2grdau4 Berke - cross

- 1 juror herself had said in response to a question about other
2 litigation that she had been involved in a personal injury
3 case. That's what I'm referring to.
4 Q. Right. My question to you is, would that information as 5 background, if Susan Brune came to you and told you that we not 6 only found a Catherine Conrad who was a suspended lawyer but we
7 also found a Catherine Conrad who was involved in a personal
8 injury lawsuit, is that something that you would have wanted to 9 know at the time?
10 A. I'm not sure I understand. We knew that Catherine Conrad
11 had said that she was involved in a personal injury suit. We 12 knew that from her answers in the voir dire.
13 Q. If you saw a piece of paper that connected Catherine Conrad
14 who was Juror No. 1 and Catherine Conrad who was a personal
15 injury lawyer and a suspended attorney who had the same address
16 as the person involved in the lawsuit, would that have been of 17 interest to you?
18 A. You know, I really am not comfortable speculating. What I
19 can tell you is I told you what I knew. I did not believe that 20 the person who had been a disbarred lawyer could have been or 21 was this Juror No. 1 based on what I knew. That's really all I
22 can tell you.
23 Q. So, your answer to my direct question is that you can't 24 answer the question?
25 A. Well, I would object if I was sitting over there, but I'm

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

1 not. You're asking me to speculate. I'm just not comfortable
2 speculating.

3 Q. I think that's on your bucket list, to move up there,
4 right?

5 A. No, not at all. I'm just not comfortable speculating.

6 Q. Isn't more information better than less when you are trying
7 to make an assessment of possible juror misconduct and a
8 connection in names between a person who may be acting as an
9 imposter and a juror on trial?

10 MR. SHECHTMAN: Judge, I'm going to object on Mr.
11 Berke's behalf.

12 THE COURT: Overruled.

13 A. I wasn't making that assessment.

14 Q. I didn't ask you if you were making that assessment. Is 15 more information better when you are trying to find out whether 16 somebody who shares the same name as a suspended attorney is 17 the juror? Yes or no.

18 A. I'm going to tell you, Mr. Okula, it sounds like you're 19 arguing with me. It depends on what that information is. All
20 I can tell you is what I know from my personal experience.
21 From what I heard, it did not occur to me for a moment that 22 there was any issue with Juror 1 and the suspended lawyer at 23 the time. That's all I can tell you. I can't speculate or 24 answer your argument, I really can't.

25 Q. What is the type of investigation you'd do if you found a

1 suspended attorney named Catherine Conrad, the same name as 2 Juror No. 1?

3 A. I was never in a position where I needed to or had to make
4 decisions about the investigation. I don't understand that I'm
5 here as an expert witness. I can tell you as a matter of fact
6 what I knew, what I was told, the conversations I had, but I
7 really can't go beyond that, Mr. Okula.

8 Q. You're not going to answer my question? You've hired
9 private investigators many times as a lawyer, right?

10 A. I have.

11 Q. Are you unwilling to answer the question that I just asked
12 about what steps you would take if you learned that Catherine
13 Conrad, a suspended attorney, was in existence and you knew you
14 had Catherine Conrad sitting in seat number 1? Are you not 15 going to answer that question?

16 A. What you are ignoring is it's such a far-fetched idea that 17 any citizen would come in here and lie to be a juror. I have 18 never experienced it as a practicing lawyer. It never occurred
19 to me it happened in this trial, and it's not something I have 20 ever thought about it. When I've used investigators it's 21 because I'm defending someone in a criminal case or civil case
22 and I want to look at facts. You're asking me to speculate and 23 give opinions about an experience I've never had.

3 THE COURT: Does any defendant have any additional
4 evidence to offer to the Court on this hearing?
5 MS. MCCARTHY: Not from Mr. Field, your Honor.
6 MR. ROTERT: We do not, your Honor.
7 MR. SKLARSKY: No, your Honor.
8 THE COURT: Does the government have anything further?
9 MR. OKULA: Thank you, your Honor. We do not.
10 THE COURT: The government rests?
11 MR. OKULA: We do indeed, your Honor.
12 THE COURT: I would like to get some post-hearing
13 briefing from the parties. It seems to me that the simplest
14 way to do it would be to have the parties submit simultaneous
15 briefs and then I give you a very short responsive brief if you
16 felt it was necessary to respond to something that the other
17 side said. We'll fix a schedule in a moment.
18 Obviously, in the briefs I want the parties to provide 19 the Court with what they believe the strongest results are of 20 this evidentiary hearing. Second, in the post-hearing briefs
21 I'd like the question of whether the attorneys for Brune &
22 Richard involved in this matter would have satisfied their 23 ethical obligations if they failed to disclose the contents of 24 the July 21 letter and their complete investigation into Juror
25 No. 1.

1 Finally, in the past I asked the parties to brief what
2 they believed might occur depending upon various rulings by the 3 Court. It seems to me that one scenario was left out. You are 4 not to conclude from this request that this is the Court's
5 thinking, but I want to receive briefing on the following
6 question.

7 If this Court were to grant the defendants' motion for 8 a new trial and also conclude that the defendant Parse had
9 waived, what would be the shake-out of that in terms of Parse's
10 ability to take that issue to the Court of Appeals at the same
11 time that the government would be taking the underlying issue
12 on motion for a new trial to the Court of Appeals, as is the 13 government's right under a specific statute? I have 14 preliminarily looked at the matter, but I'd appreciate your 15 wisdom on the question.

16 Are there any other issues that counsel want to raise?
17 Mr. Shechtman?

18 MR. SHECHTMAN: Can I try to sharpen that last
19 question?

20 THE COURT: Go ahead, certainly.

21 MR. SHECHTMAN: I take it the notion would be could 22 Mr. Parse take that appeal interlocutorily before sentencing?

23 THE COURT: Bingo.

24 MR. SHECHTMAN: The after one is easy. So it's really 25 an interlocutory.

1 THE COURT: Right. In the end, whatever happens with 2 respect to these matters before the Court, I think that it is
3 in everyone's interest that they travel together wherever 4 they're going.

5 Are there any other matters that counsel want to raise
6 at this time before we fix a schedule for the submission of 7 these briefs?

8 MR. OKULA: No, your Honor. I was just going to 9 suggest most respectfully that perhaps if counsel for the 10 government and defendants could confer momentarily about a
11 proposed schedule, then we could propose one to the Court.

12 THE COURT: That's fine with me.

13 MR. GAIR: Judge, Mr. Okula is on vacation next week,
14 so I'd like to suggest one week.

15 MR. SHECHTMAN: Judge, if we might be heard?

16 THE COURT: Go ahead.

17 MR. SHECHTMAN: We want very much to accommodate Mr.
18 Okula's vacation, seriously. He has suggested three weeks. I
19 start a trial on Tuesday, a month-long trial. I fully 20 appreciate that I have to write this brief on weekends, and I
21 will, but an extra week would be very helpful. If we could get 22 a month, that would be grand.

23 THE COURT: Fine. You've got it. Do you want to file
24 your briefs on March 16, your initial briefs, or do you want
25 March 23?

1 MR. SHECHTMAN: I'd be happy if we could have March
2 19th so we can't get that extra weekend.
3 THE COURT: I'll give you until the 23rd if you want.
4 MR. OKULA: That's fine. It separates it from St.
5 Patrick's Day more, Judge.
6 THE COURT: All right. March 23 for the initial 7 briefs. Why don't you provide your responses by April 5th.
8 MR. OKULA: That's fine, Judge.
9 THE COURT: Will that work?
10 MR. SHECHTMAN: Yes.
11 THE COURT: I'll take the matter then on submission.
12 Is there anything else that counsel want to raise?
13 MR. OKULA: Not other than our thanks, Judge.
14 THE COURT: My thanks to all of you for conducting the 15 hearing in the customary professional and efficient manner.
16 Certainly there are some aspects of it that have been 17 memorable, and that's an understatement. Have a good
18 afternoon.

Supreme Court, Appellate Division, First Department, New York.
In the Matter of Catherine M. CONRAD, a suspended attorney:
Departmental Disciplinary Committee for the First Judicial Department, Petitioner, Catherine M. Conrad, Respondent.

Dec. 9, 2010.

Background: Departmental Disciplinary Committee instituted disciplinary proceedings against attorney. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, 48 A.D.3d 187, 846 N.Y.S.2d 912, suspended attorney from practice of law for failure to respond to requests made by Committee pursuant to its investigations of complaints made against her. Committee subsequently moved for order suspending attorney on ground that she suffered from disability by reason of physical or mental infirmity or illness. Attorney cross-moved for order converting her current suspension to medical suspension nunc pro tunc and order vacating suspension and reinstating her to practice of law.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, held that:
(1) attorney's immediate reinstatement was not warranted, and
(2) attorney was required to prove her fitness to be reinstated.

Suspension ordered.

PER CURIAM.

169 Respondent Catherine M. Conrad was admitted to the practice of law in the State of New York by the Second Judicial Department on January 26, 2000, and, at all times relevant to this proceeding, has maintained an office for the practice of law within the First Judicial Department.

In a previous order dated December 18, 2007, this Court suspended respondent from the practice of law for failure to respond to requests made by the Departmental Disciplinary Committee pursuant to its investigation of two complaints made against her (22 NYCRR 603.4[e][1][i]). After receiving a response by respondent six months later seeking an opportunity to respond to the complaints, the Committee conducted an investigation. Based upon respondent's admitted problem with alcohol dependency, which she acknowledged was connected to her failure to cooperate and the underlying conduct, the Committee obtained a psychiatric evaluation of respondent in November 2009, and a subsequent re-evaluation in May 2010. The psychiatrist determined that respondent's prognosis is good, but did not go as far as to assert that she is now fit to re-commence the practice of law.

The Departmental Disciplinary Committee now moves for an order suspending respondent from the practice of law on the ground that she suffers from a "disability by reason of physical or mental infirmity or illness" (22 NYCRR 603.16[c][1]). In her cross motion respondent seeks to convert the current suspension to a medical suspension nunc pro tunc, but further seeks an order vacating the suspension and reinstating her to the practice of law, due to her year-long sobriety.

The Committee's motion, and the first branch of respondent's cross motion, are granted to the extent that the prior finding of non-cooperation is vacated and an order *189 of suspension based upon the attorney's medical disability is granted nunc pro tunc (see Matter of Kaplan, 65 A.D.3d 287, 883 N.Y.S.2d 182 [2009]; Matter of Fusco, 18 A.D.3d 81, 798 N.Y.S.2d 364 [2005]).

[1][2] However, that branch of respondent's cross motion seeking immediate reinstatement is denied at this time. The cross motion itself concedes the existence of the alcohol dependence rendering her unfit to practice law; additionally, she acknowledged during her deposition that her failure to cooperate and 170 her underlying conduct was related to alcohol dependency. To support her cross motion, respondent implies that the examining psychiatrist failed to satisfy an obligation to establish that she continues to be unfit to resume her practice. However, to be entitled to reinstatement, since the initial infirmity has been conceded, it is respondent who must prove her fitness to be reinstated (see 22 NYCRR 603.16[f]), and that burden is not satisfied here by her own self-assessment (see Matter of Stewart, 47 A.D.3d 43, 846 N.Y.S.2d 13 [2007]). The branch of respondent's cross motion seeking reinstatement to the practice of law therefore must be denied at this time, without prejudice to a further application, supported by an evaluation by a mental health provider attesting to her current fitness to re-commence the practice of law (see Matter of Supino, 23 A.D.3d 11, 14, 806 N.Y.S.2d 178 [2005]).

Accordingly, the Committee's motion and respondent's cross motion should be granted to the extent that the prior order's finding of non-cooperation is vacated, and respondent is suspended from the practice of law for an indefinite period until further order of this Court, nunc pro tunc to December 18, 2007, and the branch of respondent's cross motion seeking reinstatement to the practice of law should be denied without prejudice to a further motion for the same relief, supported by an expert's evaluation attesting to her present fitness to practice law.

Respondent suspended from the practice of law in the State of New York for an indefinite period until further order of this Court, effective nunc pro tunc to December 18, 2007. Cross motion denied, without prejudice to a further motion, as indicated. So much of the Opinion Per Curiam and order of this Court entered on December 18, 2007 (M-4837) incorporating a finding of non-cooperation vacated, as indicated.

All concur.

Case No. S3 09 Cr. 581 (WHP)

The Honorable William H. Pauley, III

DECLARATION OF STEPHEN GILLERS

I, Stephen Gillers, under penalty of perjury, declare as follows:

Qualifications

1. My name is Stephen Gillers. I am a law professor at New York University School of Law, where I have taught the rules and law governing lawyers and judges (“legal ethics”) regularly since 1978. I am author of a leading casebook in the field, Regulation of Lawyers: Problems of Law and Ethics (9th ed. 2012). I have spoken hundreds of times on the subject of legal ethics at state and local bar associations nationwide and at American Bar Association meetings, at state and federal judicial conferences, and at law firms and corporate law offices in the United States and abroad. For more than a decade, I have been and remain active in the legal ethics work of the ABA’s Center for Professional Responsibility, spending hundreds of hours yearly on this work. Most recently, I have been a member of the ABA’s Ethics 20/20 Commission, a three and a half year project to review the rules of ethics governing lawyers in light of globalization and advance in technology. I have written widely in the area, including for law journals and the law and popular press. Legal ethics is the primary focus of my academic research. My resume is annexed as Exhibit A.

Question Addressed And Summary Of Conclusion

2. I have been asked to address the question the Court posed on February 16, 2012 – namely, “whether the attorneys for Brune & Richard involved in this matter would have satisfied their ethical obligations if they failed to disclose the contents of the July 21 letter and their complete investigation into Juror No. 1.” The question does not specify a time frame for any possible “fail[ure] to disclose.” I have been asked, therefore, to address any disclosure duty in March, May, and July of 2011. I have not been asked to address, and I am not addressing, the separate question of whether the motion for a new trial based on the conduct of juror Conrad is meritorious. That is not a question of legal ethics.

3. In summary, my opinion is that (i) the Brune & Richard lawyers had no ethical obligation to disclose the results of their March 2011 research in March, or the results of their March and May 2011 research in May; (ii) the Brune & Richard lawyers had no ethical obligation to disclose the existence or the results of their March and May research in their July 8 motion for a new trial or during the July 15 conference call with the Court; and (iii) nothing the Brune & Richard lawyers said or did in the July 8 memorandum or the July 15 conference call violated their ethical obligations.

Factual Assumptions

4. I have read the following documents:

- Catherine Conrad's letter to the Government dated May 25, 2011;
- Defendants' Brief in Support of a New Trial dated July 8, 2011;
- Transcript of Telephone Conference with Court dated July 15, 2011;
- Letter from Susan Brune dated July 21, 2011;
- Letter from Susan Brune dated July 29, 2011;
- Affidavit of Susan Brune with Exhibits (including Catherine Conrad's jury questionnaire and voir dire responses) dated September 15, 2011;
- Government's Waiver Brief dated October 7, 2011;
- Defendant Parse's Waiver Brief dated October 27, 2011; and
- Transcript of Hearing dated February 15 and 16, 2012.

5. My opinion is based on the cited documents and I assume as true the facts that emerge from the sworn testimony at the hearing held February 15 and 16, 2012. I note that the testimony at that hearing was subject to robust adverse direct examination by Government attorneys.

General Observations And Legal Standards

6. The New York Rules of Professional Conduct (hereafter "New York Rules") specifically identify when a lawyer is obligated to disclose information to the Court. The New York Rules are incorporated in the local rules of this Court. See Southern District of New York Local Rule 1.5(b)(5).

7. Relevant here is New York Rule 3.3(a) and (b), which provides:

- (a) A lawyer shall not knowingly: (1) make a false statement of fact or law to a tribunal or fail to correct a false statement of material fact or law previously made to the tribunal by the lawyer; (2) fail to disclose to the tribunal controlling legal authority known to the lawyer to be directly adverse to the position of the client and not disclosed by opposing counsel; or (3) offer or use evidence that the lawyer knows to be false. If a lawyer, the lawyer's client, or a witness called by the lawyer has offered material evidence and the lawyer comes to know of its falsity, the lawyer shall take reasonable remedial measures, including, if necessary, disclosure to the tribunal. A lawyer may refuse to offer evidence, other than the testimony of a defendant in a criminal matter, that the lawyer reasonably believes is false.

(b) A lawyer who represents a client before a tribunal and who knows that a person intends to engage, is engaging or has engaged in criminal or fraudulent conduct related to the proceeding shall take reasonable remedial measures, including, if necessary, disclosure to the tribunal.

8. Also relevant is New York Rule 3.5(d), which provides:

A lawyer shall reveal promptly to the court improper conduct by a member of the venire or a juror, or by another toward a member of the venire or a juror or a member of his or her family of which the lawyer has knowledge.

9. Each of these rules requires knowledge on the part of the lawyer, and that knowledge must be "actual" knowledge. The standard is a subjective one. New York Rule 1.0(k) contains this definition:

Knowingly, known, know, or knows denotes actual knowledge of the fact in question. A person's knowledge may be inferred from circumstances.¹

10. A leading Second Circuit case addresses the knowledge requirement. In Doe v. Federal Grievance Committee, 847 F.2d 57 (2nd Cir. 1988), a district judge in Connecticut disciplined a lawyer who did not report his belief that an opposing witness had lied in a deposition. The Connecticut (and the New York) rule at the time required a "lawyer who receives information clearly establishing that...[a] person other than his client has perpetrated a fraud upon a tribunal

¹ I have also been asked to address the potential relevance of Rule 8.4(d) of the New York Rules, which says that a "lawyer or law firm shall not...engage in conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice." This rule should not be read to expand Rule 3.3's mens rea requirement of knowledge. When the New York Rules of Professional Conduct were adopted to replace the Code of Professional Responsibility, the courts chose the standard of "knowledge," the same standard as in the ABA Model Rules, to replace "clearly established," which the Second Circuit had already interpreted to mean "knowledge" (see ¶¶ 10-11 infra). When a specific and considered rule requires knowledge, another and general rule should not be interpreted to impose a duty based on a lower standard. There would be obvious notice and fairness interests implicated in doing so.

shall promptly reveal the fraud to the tribunal.” Id. at 61 (emphasis added)(quoting DR 7-102(B)(2) of the Code of Professional Responsibility). The district judge concluded that Doe had “information clearly establishing” deposition perjury because he had “clear and convincing evidence of [the] witness’s perjury.” Id. Doe himself testified that “he believed that [the] witness had lied at the deposition.” Id. at 59.

11. Without rejecting the lower court’s factual finding that Doe had clear and convincing evidence of fraud on the tribunal, the Doe Court held that “clearly establishing” required more. It held that “knowledge is required before the disclosure duty arises.” Id. at 62. Clear and convincing proof, which is an objective test, did not trigger a reporting duty. That a lawyer “strongly suspected” fraud on the tribunal (a subjective test) was also insufficient. Id. at 63. As the Court noted:

Our experience indicates that if any standard less than actual knowledge was adopted in this context [i.e., DR 7-102(B)(2)], serious consequences might follow. If attorneys were bound as part of their ethical duties to report to the court each time they strongly suspected that a witness lied, courts would be inundated with such reports. Court dockets would quickly become overburdened with conducting these collateral proceedings which would necessarily hold up the ultimate disposition of the underlying action. We do not believe that the Code’s drafters intended to throw the court system into such a morass. Instead, it seems that the only reasonable conclusion is that the drafters intended disclosure of only that information which the attorney reasonably knows to be a fact and which, when combined with other facts in his knowledge, would clearly establish the existence of a fraud on the tribunal.

To interpret the rule to mean otherwise would be to require attorneys to disclose mere suspicions of fraud which are based upon incomplete information or information which may fall short of clearly establishing the existence of a fraud. We do not suggest, however, that by requiring that the attorney have actual knowledge of a fraud before he is bound to disclose it, he must wait until he has proof beyond a moral certainty that fraud has been committed. Rather, we simply conclude that he must clearly know, rather than suspect, that a fraud on the court has been committed before he brings this knowledge to the court’s attention.

Id. Discipline was reversed.²

12. In an adversary legal system like ours, mandatory disclosure rules, which operate as a check on the premises of that system, receive scrutiny and debate from the courts and the bar over their proper scope. Furthermore, American jurisdictions do not all agree on how to reconcile competing interests – those of the client, the tribunal, and the adversary. New York, like most (but not all) jurisdictions, has adopted Rules 3.3 (a) and (b) in identical or substantially identical form³ and it has also adopted Rule 3.5(d). These rules mandate disclosure of certain information to a court even if disclosure may harm the client and, for Rule 3.3 explicitly and Rule 3.5(d) implicitly, even if the information is protected as confidential client information. See New York Rule 3.3(c).⁴ But the duty arises only if the lawyer has “actual knowledge.”

13. A second decision also recognizes the delicate balance between the adversary system and duties to a litigation opponent or the tribunal. In re Pennie & Edmonds LLP, 323 F.3d 86 (2nd Cir. 2003) was an appeal of Rule 11 sanctions. When a party seeks Rule 11 sanctions, the target of the motion has a 21-day “safe harbor” within which to withdraw or correct the challenged submission. If it does not, the “mental state applicable to liability for Rule 11 sanctions is objective unreasonableness.” Id. at 90. When, however, a court initiates a sanction proceeding, as by order to show cause, there is no safe harbor. Because the lawyer cannot take it back, Pennie & Edmonds holds that the required mental state is “bad faith,” a subjective test like actual knowledge. The Court explained that “[a]ny regime of sanctions for a lawyer’s role in the course of representing a client inevitably has implications for the functioning of the adversary system.” Id. In support of its holding, the Court cited the interest of “[a] vigorous adversary system.” Id. at 91.

14. In sum, from the perspective of a lawyer’s ethical obligations, the premises of our “vigorous adversary system” control unless the situation is governed by an express exception in ethics rules, statutes, judicial decisions, or other law. These exceptions, which are written with appreciation of the need for precision, give lawyers notice of the duties that override their adversarial obligations. As the Supreme Court wrote in a different context in Polk County v. Dodson, 454 U.S. 312 (1981):

Within the context of our legal system, the duties of a defense lawyer are those of a personal counselor and advocate. It is often said that lawyers are “officers of the court.” But the Courts of Appeals are agreed that a lawyer representing a client is not, by virtue of being an officer of the court, a state actor “under color of state law” within the meaning of § 1983. In our system a defense lawyer characteristically opposes the designated representatives of the State. The system assumes that adversarial testing will ultimately advance the public interest in truth and fairness. But it posits that a defense lawyer best serves the public, not by acting on behalf of the State or in concert with it, but rather by advancing “the undivided interests of his client.”

Id. at 318 (footnotes omitted). The question I turn to now is whether lawyers from Brune & Richard LLP acted in violation of any of the exceptions to their duties in the adversary system by not disclosing certain information prior to their July 21, 2011, letter to the Court.

³ See http://www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/migrated/cpr/pic/3_3.authcheckdam.pdf (last visited April 5, 2012).

⁴ The ABA Model Rules do not contain Rule 3.5(d). In my view, its mandate appears duplicative of a lawyer’s obligations under New York and Model Rule 3.3(b).

DISCUSSION

Events in March 2011

15. The Brune & Richard lawyers had no duty to reveal to the court Trzaskoma's discovery of a 2010 court order suspending a Bronx lawyer with the same name as juror Conrad. None of the lawyers had knowledge that the Bronx lawyer and juror Conrad were the same person. None even had "clear and convincing" evidence or "strongly suspected" – the objective and subjective tests Doe rejected – they were the same person. Trzaskoma and Brune (who was told of the discovery though not shown the suspension order that Trzaskoma discovered but did not print) resolved to await juror Conrad's voir dire answers. Those answers, including juror Conrad's Bronxville address, directly contradicted any identity between the juror and the lawyer. This was in fact compelling. If the sworn answers were true, the juror was not the lawyer. A contrary conclusion would require the lawyers to believe that a suspended lawyer would repeatedly perjure herself in federal court in order to sit on a jury.

Events in May 2011

16. Juror Conrad gave the Court a note asking if the jury was going to be instructed on vicarious liability and respondeat superior. The contents of the note led Trzaskoma, assisted by others at the firm, to take another look at the issue the next day. The 2010 suspension order and an earlier suspension order from 2007 were found. Both identified a Bronx lawyer. A paralegal discovered the Westlaw profile and forwarded it to Trzaskoma in an email that highlighted selected information. After seeing the selected information but before reviewing the entire profile, Trzaskoma wrote "Jesus, I do think it's her," but then, after reviewing the entire profile, changed her mind in light of the contradiction between the juror's voir dire answers and the limited information about lawyer Conrad (different levels of education, different addresses, etc.). In addition, Trzaskoma did not believe that the given age of the Bronx lawyer agreed with the apparent age of juror Conrad.

17. Trzaskoma discussed the issue with Brune and Edelstein later in the day. All three concluded that juror Conrad was not the suspended lawyer. Co-counsel with whom the matter was thereafter informally discussed thought the question not worth pursuing. Because the Brune & Richard lawyers did not believe – let alone have actual knowledge – that the juror and the suspended lawyer were the same person, they did not present their information to the Court. At least five lawyers, based on what they had seen or been told, reached this conclusion.

18. At this time, as earlier, no Brune & Richard lawyer had actual knowledge that juror Conrad was lawyer Conrad. Actual knowledge is the mental state that creates the disclosure duty under New York Rules 3.3(b) and 3.5(d). There was no ethical duty to reveal a suspicion, even a strong suspicion.

19. Any notion that silence was intended to preserve undetected a basis for a new trial motion in the event of conviction is belied by the lawyers' actions. There was no effort to seek a new trial based on juror misconduct (nor did the firm give any consideration to that possibility) from the time of the verdict and until after receipt on June 20 of juror Conrad's letter to the prosecutor and the ensuing investigation.

Events in July 2011

The July 8 Memorandum of Law

20. The memorandum does not reference the discoveries in March or May. There was no duty to do so. I accept that the Brune & Richard lawyers could anticipate a possible waiver claim and could see how the government could cite the information that they had in March and May to bolster that claim. But the lawyer ethics rules impose no general duty to volunteer information that an opponent might use to support its argument and the exceptions in the rules cited do not create one specifically.⁵

21. To put it otherwise, in order to find a duty to reveal there must be a source of the duty. Professional conduct rules do impose duties to reveal, but they do so in a way that gives lawyers notice of their requirements. No rule required disclosure of the information discovered in March or May. Any such rule would have to specify the information required to be revealed and the level of confidence in the accuracy of that information. Here, the rules imposing a duty to disclose to the tribunal are Rules 3.3(b) and 3.5(d). These rules use actual knowledge as the level of confidence required for the duty to disclosure. The information the lawyers had about the material they had gathered in March and May negates actual knowledge; the actions of the lawyers are consistent only with a conclusion of a lack of actual knowledge. In sum, only if the lawyers had had actual knowledge in March or May would they have had to reveal that in July, and they did not have actual knowledge.

22. In certain places, the memorandum contains statements that are apparently alleged to imply that the Brune & Richard lawyers did not have information about juror Conrad's identity prior to June 20, when they received a copy of her letter to the government.

⁵ Because the premises of the adversary system are central here, instruction from the contiguous world of Rule 11 is again apt:

The primary purpose of Rule 11 is to deter baseless court filings, but this goal must be considered in light of the fact that, in an adversary system of litigation, the essence of the lawyer's task is to present issues of facts and law "as favorably as fairly possible" in support of the client's claim. See United Nat. Ins. Co. v. R & D Latex Corp., 242 F.3d 1102, 1115 (9th Cir. 2001). Therefore, judges should "impose sanctions on lawyers for their mode of advocacy only in the most egregious situations, lest lawyers be deterred from vigorous representation of their clients." Id. (citing Schlaifer Nance & Co., Inc. v. Estates of Warhol, 194 F.3d 323, 341 (2nd Cir. 1999)).

Desert Outdoor Advertising, Inc. v. City of Oakland, 2009 WL 943948 at *3 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 7 2009).

23. The lawyers wrote: “The tone and content of the letter, which were in sharp contrast to the image Conrad had projected through the trial (‘always head down, taking notes’), caused defendants concern and prompted them to investigate.” Memorandum at 9. And they later wrote: “This is not a situation where Conrad disclosed sufficient information to warrant inquiry by counsel. Defendants had no basis to inquire whether Conrad was lying in response to each of the Court’s questions.” Memorandum at 32, n.13 (internal citation and parenthetical quote omitted).

24. In my opinion, these statements should be seen as true, not merely literally true in a hypertechnical or crabbed sense of the word, but true as reasonably read. They do not become untrue because a reader may draw a false inference that the lawyers did not intend. The juror’s letter did cause concern and did prompt an investigation, as the first quotation in the memorandum states. That statement does not disclaim a prior search, whether that prior search is called an investigation or something else. I believe that focus on the word “investigate,” which is not a term of art, would be misguided here. The sentence correctly describes what the letter caused the lawyers to do.

25. The second quote focuses on the voir dire in March and is also true as reasonably read. The lawyers had concluded that the order suspending a lawyer with the same name as juror Conrad was not a “basis” for an inquiry into the truthfulness of juror Conrad’s answers. Just the opposite. Her voir dire answers, in their view, dispelled reason for inquiry. A suspended lawyer would not lie under oath at voir dire, they reasoned, given the consequences to the lawyer’s ability ever to regain admission to practice. In my opinion, this conclusion was compelling.

26. It is also my opinion that the July 8, 2011, memorandum, taken as a whole, does not show a “knowing[]” violation of the provisions of Rule 3.3. It is true that even when a lawyer does not have a duty to speak, if she does speak, she may not knowingly misrepresent to a court or adversary. But an unintended inference is not a misrepresentation. The lack of disclaimer language in the memorandum’s true statements – the fact that the lawyers, while focused on the new trial motion, did not anticipate what a reader might infer and what they did not mean to imply – is not an action that can support a finding of unethical behavior under the New York Rules.

27. The lawyers understandably now wish they had not included these passages as written. Greater focus might have led them to anticipate how others might read them differently than intended, and to omit them (they were unnecessary to the motion), rephrase them, or add the history of their earlier research.

The July 15 Telephone Conference

28. In the July 15 telephone conference, the Court said that it wanted to “ascertain from each of the defendants ... whether any of them were aware of the disturbing things that have been revealed by defense on this motion concerning Juror Number One [Conrad].” The Court invited a response on the call or via letter. Trzaskoma’s response was:

Trzaskoma: We were not aware of the facts that have come to light, and I think if your Honor deems it appropriate, we can submit a letter.

The Court: All right. I do. Because I would like to make certain that any defendant who had a jury consultant on the matter also make certain that the jury consultant did not have any information on Juror Number One.

Trzaskoma: The only thing additional that I would offer your Honor is—well, we can address this in a letter. I think it's more appropriate.

29. This colloquy must be read in its (rather brief) entirety, that is, as a whole. Trzaskoma's statement implies that the answer to the Court's question from Brune & Richard would not be that it had no information at all. It would not require a letter to say only that. It is, instead, clear that Trzaskoma had something "additional...to offer," and chose to accept the Court's invitation to say it in a letter, which was done on July 21 in a fashion that adequately disclosed the firm's earlier research and internal communications on the subject. "The general rule is that statements must be taken in context, and that related parts of a document must be taken together. That a hasty reader might take the first paragraph out of context is not in the present circumstances enough to brand the memorandum as false." The memorandum must be "read as a whole." Young v. City of Providence, 404 F.3d 33, 40-41 (1st Cir. 2005) (Rule 11 appeal) (citations omitted).

CONCLUSION

30. For the reasons stated, my opinion is that the actions of the Brune & Richard lawyers throughout the trial and in the months following with respect to the information they had obtained about Catherine Conrad were entirely consistent with their responsibilities under the lawyer ethics rules.

ECF CASE

Case No. S3 09 Cr. 581 (WHP)

AFFIDAVIT OF DAVID PARSE

STATE OF NEW YORK)
 ss.:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

DAVID PARSE, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. My name is David Parse, and I am a defendant in the above-captioned case.

2. During jury selection (or shortly thereafter), I heard one of the lawyers at the Brune firm (I believe it was Theresa Trzaskoma) say that there was a prospective juror (or a juror) who had the same name as a suspended attorney but that it was not the same person. I cannot recall if the lawyer was speaking to me or if I overheard her speaking to someone else.

3. A week after the verdict, I met with the Brune lawyers to discuss possible post-trial motions and appellate issues. The possibility of a juror misconduct issue was not raised.

4. It was not until after the Brune firm filed its motion for a new trial that I learned that prior to jury deliberations the issue of Conrad being a suspended lawyer had resurfaced. More precisely, to the best of my memory, it was after the July 15, 2011 conference call that I learned (i) that on May 12, 2011, Ms. Trzaskoma had considered the possibility that Juror No. 1 was the suspended lawyer, (ii) that a paralegal had generated a Westlaw report, and (iii) that the Brune lawyers had concluded that Conrad was not the suspended attorney and determined that there was no need to inform the Court.

1 (In open court)
2 THE DEPUTY CLERK: Case of United States of America v.
3 David Parse. Appearances for the government?
4 MS. DAVIS: Good afternoon, your Honor. Nanette Davis
5 and Stanley J. Okula, Jr. for the government.
6 THE COURT: Good afternoon, Ms. Davis.
7 MR. SHECHTMAN: Paul Shechtman for Mr. Parse. Ali
8 Feingold who is a paralegal who has worked on this matter is 9 with me, and obviously Mr. Parse is here.
10 THE COURT: Good afternoon, Mr. Shechtman. And I note
11 the presence of Mr. Parse at counsel table.
12 This is oral argument on the defendant Parse's motion
13 for a new trial. Do you wish to be heard, Mr. Shechtman?
14 MR. SHECHTMAN: I do, your Honor. As your Honor now
15 knows and from the papers, there is only one issue here which 16 is a question of ineffective assistance of counsel.
17 THE COURT: If you can just pull the mike a little
18 closer. It has been a long week.
19 MR. SHECHTMAN: I understand. I think for all of us.
20 Justice O'Connor once said that Strickland was the 21 most cited case that she ever wrote, and I say that because I
22 assume the Court is quite familiar with it and the legal 23 standard. And obviously the standard is two part.
24 I would like to think though, I may be proven wrong,
25 that if we get to prejudice, we should prevail. But we can

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 have that discussion.

2 The first question obviously is was the performance
3 deficient here. And that I think turns on the question of did
4 the Brune firm make a strategic judgment on that fateful
5 May 12, 2011 day, maybe even earlier during the voir dire
6 itself. And I'm not sure there is a great definition of 7 strategic judgment, but there is very good language in Justice
8 Stevens' dissent, but I don't think the majority disagreed with 9 it, that talks about a conscious choice between two 10 alternatives borne of deliberation not happenstance,
11 inattention or neglect.

12 The Second Circuit has told us that it is not a 13 strategic judgment when what is going on is oversight or 14 carelessness or ineptitude.

15 I like to think about this as strategic judgments are 16 situations where lawyers say, one of two courses could have 17 answered my client's interests. I choose A after some thought.
18 It may be that B is the wiser course. But we'd retry a lot of 19 cases if we second guess lawyers in that situation and 20 obviously the Supreme Court says we shouldn't.

21 I say in our papers that if what went on here was one
22 of two things. If the Brune firm in that plaza conversation
23 said the equivalent of let's sandbag the Court, let's go
24 forward. We know this information and we get a free bite at 25 the apple. It's hard to think that's not a strategic decision,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 and that of course is very similar to the Chappee case in the
2 First Circuit. Justice Stevens talks about it being a
3 legitimate decision, but even an unethical one like sandbagging
4 I think is going to turn out to bind the client.

5 The other way this could be a strategic decision, if 6 what they said to themselves, let's sandbag, but more, look,
7 she is a pro-defense juror given what we know about this 8 checkered history, let's keep her on because we're likely to 9 get an acquittal now. That's the government's view here.
10 That's what they've advanced in their papers. And I think
11 that's not at all what happened in this case.

12 I think the testimony, and the Court referred to the 13 testimony and said the facts were largely undisputed. That 14 doesn't mean the inferences from them were ones that all sides
15 were ready to adopt. But I don't think the core facts were 16 much in dispute at the hearing. And what happened here,
17 particularly on that day of May the 12th, is that Ms. I will
18 say Theresa because I have trouble with her last name, I
19 apologize, had real second thoughts when she thought about that 20 juror note and the legal words in it. She then sent paralegals
21 to work -- as your Honor knows, the one thing about the Brune
22 firm is they had an army of them. And she got information
23 back, and her e-mail said something like, Jesus, I think it's 24 her. And whether that is characterized as fleeting or a belief
25 held longer than that, there is no doubt that she thought it.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 What's always been odd to me is when she gets to the
2 plaza, how quickly she abandons it. And whether it is because 3 she's exhausted at the end of a long trial, whether it's 4 because, as she said, she looked more at this report and she
5 thought it was more complicated, whether it was because her
6 seniors cowed her. But, as your Honor says, the discussion
7 there was superficial and never addressed the information that 8 she had accumulated over the last 12 hours. And she simply 9 goes along. And she goes along with her two seniors who don't 10 know of the Westlaw report, but say to themselves it can't be 11 her. There is no need to tell the judge. Let's go home, it's 12 been a long day, a long trial.

13 Now, we differed back at the time as to whether that 14 was a waiver or not. But there is no doubt that that is not a
15 judgment that a lawyer should have made in that situation.
16 Your Honor referred to it as a tragic misjudgment, and it was.

17 One of two things should have happened. There should 18 have been an investigation, or there should have been someone 19 saying, why me investigate? Let's just tell the Court and 20 we'll go from there. And neither of those things happened.
21 Instead, people went home, they spoke to their colleagues a day
22 or two later, and said, geez, she has the same name, but it
23 can't be her. And nobody said, well, let's do the easy thing
24 and let's tell the Court. As your Honor says, a few days
25 later, we substituted a new juror and nobody thinks to

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 themselves we could just tell the judge.

2 Strickland talks about counsel has a duty to make
3 reasonable investigations or make a reasonable decision that
4 makes particular investigation unnecessary. And if ever there
5 was a reason either to investigate more, to unleash the 6 Nardello firm, or, I say this respectfully, unleash the Court.
7 Because as crazy as this woman was, I've always thought if your
8 Honor brought her out and said are you the same person, I'm not 9 sure her lying would have gone that far. You may disagree with 10 me on that, but I think she would have had trouble there.

11 But nobody does it. And nobody does it not because 12 they were playing a strategic game that they were out to 13 sandbag a court or they were out to get an acquittal. They 14 didn't do it because, to use the Second Circuit's word, it was 15 an oversight, it was careless, it was inept. And if I'm right
16 about that, then I think one has met the first prong here, and 17 then the question becomes prejudice.

18 And I can talk more, your Honor, the government
19 doesn't argue sandbagging. I can talk more about why I think
20 this wasn't -- look, I've read the Court's opinion, I think
21 only seven times. And I know that the Court at the end of it
22 talks about gambling. But, I don't think the Court is making
23 findings in that opinion that there was a great strategy going 24 on in that court. I think your Honor's findings are that these 25 people really dropped the ball, and they failed to do what they

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 should have done as lawyers. And then after that, I've always
2 thought, partly because they dropped the ball, they were less
3 than candid in what they said to the Court going forward.

4 THE COURT: That last point is really another part of
5 the analysis, isn't it, that, why shouldn't this Court view
6 Brune & Richard's lack of candor with the Court in making their 7 motion as circumstantial evidence that they were in fact trying
8 to conceal from the Court a strategic decision they made?

9 MR. SHECHTMAN: Look, I think, and the Court does in 10 its opinion consider it as circumstantial evidence and it's not 11 a pretty picture. But the question to me has always been what 12 is it circumstantial evidence of? And I think it is 13 circumstantial evidence of a realization that they had a
14 responsibility to tell the Court, and they walked away that 15 night and really left the Court in an untenable position such 16 that at least two, and I hope three, defendants may be on trial
17 again in the spring.

18 So, I don't have any doubt that you can take that 19 conduct and look back. The question is, do you look back and 20 say to yourself, these are people who knew they dropped the 21 ball and were careless and inattentive and didn't fulfill their 22 obligations to the Court? Or do you go back and say these are 23 people who made a strategic decision to game the system at an 24 earlier time. I don't think there is any evidence to support
25 that. As I've said before, there is nothing in that plaza

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

1 conversation --

2 THE COURT: I'm really thinking about beyond the plaza
3 conversation, at the time a month and a half later when they
4 filed their motion, they failed to disclose to the Court what
5 they knew and when they knew it. And a series of proceedings
6 then occur, essentially initiated by both the Court and the 7 government to find out what they knew and when they knew it.
8 And their statements in their memorandum to the Court on their
9 motion that they knew were wrong or misleading at the time that 10 they made them to me.

11 MR. SHECHTMAN: You're not going to get much argument
12 from me on the point. The Court has a sort of lovely phrase in 13 the opinion about disclosure by iteration or something like
14 that. There is no doubt when you go from the telephone
15 conversation to the document itself, and then to and not 16 wanting further discovery, wanting your Honor to somehow
17 address a preliminary issue and issues of privilege. Your 18 Honor knows I got in this case late and the first thing I did
19 was to say, what are we kidding ourself? We are going to turn
20 over those documents to the Court because worse comes to worst,
21 the Court is going to look at them in camera. And if it is 22 going to look at them in camera, it is going to look at them, I
23 don't know you can say out of camera, but it's going to look at 24 them. This is not a game.

25 I think what happened, though, is lawyers said to
SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

1 themselves we failed the Court. I have said to myself a
2 hundred times, it is so easy the next morning or even that
3 afternoon to walk back in and say to the judge, Judge, we 4 think -- we don't really believe this, for a variety of 5 reasons, but you should know the following. That she has the 6 same name, there is other information here, and whatever your 7 Honor wants to do with it, we don't think it's her, but we
8 would be foolish if we didn't bring this to your attention.

9 I think what happened to the Brune firm was after this
10 revelation, they said to themselves oh God, we really did drop
11 the ball. But dropping the ball is ineffectiveness. Dropping 12 the ball to me is not strategy.

13 Look, if your Honor looks at that conduct, and I know,
14 and I say this respectfully, I know how much that conduct eats
15 at the Court because it's wrong, and the result of it is a very 16 long trial in this courtroom has to be done again. But, I also 17 don't think that one looks at it and says ah-ha, there was a 18 strategy going on.

19 I think the lawyers thought to themselves that the 20 Court is going to be very disappointed in us if it realizes 21 that we didn't come forward. Right. If it realizes we took 22 for an answer it can't be her, when investigation or telling
23 the Court was the better course.

24 If the Court concludes that that conduct is so
25 egregious that circumstantially it proves strategy, I'm not

1 going to win. We're going to have a sentencing in January and
2 not a trial in the spring. But I don't think you can read that
3 much into it, and I don't think that in fairness to Mr. Parse
4 the record supports that. But I understand your Honor's views
5 of the matter. I can't say more.

6 THE COURT: Other than the alleged deficiencies by the 7 Brune firm regarding Juror No. 1, was Parse's counsel otherwise
8 constitutionally effective?

9 MR. SHECHTMAN: Look, I've never read a trial record
10 where I didn't say I wish they would have preserved that issue,
11 I wish they would have made that argument, I think that 12 cross-examination could have been stronger. I came away from 13 that trial thinking, boy, that Barry Berke is a great
14 cross-examiner.

15 If you asked me was it constitutionally adequate, you
16 bet. It was very solid defense by a group of very good
17 lawyers. So, that one's easy for me.

18 THE COURT: Can you think of any circumstance where a 19 Court could find both a waiver to an impartial jury and 20 effective assistance of counsel?

21 MR. SHECHTMAN: Yes. I think. The simplest one is if 22 it really was a strategic decision, take the most blatant case,
23 the lawyer said to themselves free bite at the apple, don't 24 tell the judge. If we get an acquittal the great thing about 25 the double jeopardy clause is it's over. That is a waiver

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

1 under any definition.

2 It's also under Chappee in the First Circuit, and I
3 would bet it is also effective assistance. Or it's not
4 ineffective assistance, even though one can say that's back
5 alley -- I can't remember the words in Chappee, but they are 6 not very flattering. Even though you can say those things,
7 it's got to be effective assistance because you're not going to 8 let people get away with that game. There is a perfect
9 example.

10 You can have, I've done this as a grid, and you can 11 have, if you put waiver and ineffective assistance, you can 12 fill out most of the four boxes. There is a case in the Second
13 Circuit that I stumbled across which is Flores. It is old
14 enough there is a Judge Van Graafeiland dissent. Flores is one 15 where there is a waiver. The trial lawyer I think says after 16 trial, look, I've come across this 3500 material, this Rosario
17 material, but it wouldn't have helped me very much. And he 18 says it at a time when it is per se reversible not to have 19 turned over that 3500 material. There is no harmless error
20 standard, that's how crazy New York law was. And the First 21 Department in New York Court of Appeals says waiver. You say
22 right on the record you're not pressing the issue. The Second
23 Circuit said ineffective assistance, right. How can a lawyer
24 possibly having been handed a piece of paper which is a new 25 trial card, how can you not play it. So there is a situation

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 where you can have waiver, but ineffective assistance. And I
2 think it is that that Judge Easterbrook had in mind when he
3 said you have to think about each of these doctrines separately
4 and you can probably have every combination of them.

5 THE COURT: All right.

6 MR. SHECHTMAN: Look, on the prejudice prong, I would 7 just say this. There were acquittals on all but two of these 8 counts. Mr. Parse is not situated that much differently than 9 Mr. Brubaker, and the proof as it came in didn't come in much
10 differently. There is a sort of lovely irony here that the 11 government cooperator who the Jenkins lawyer dealt with him was 12 actually a witness, and so, the Kramer Levin firm got to 13 cross-examine him. And in a sense having him as a cooperator
14 was helpful to their side because they established that their 15 client, like the taxpayers and everyone else, was told 16 repeatedly this is lawful. What distinguishes these two men is 17 the, quote, backdate.

18 And what I've tried to say in my papers is I think the 19 government was very good at trial in turning this into a
20 backdating case. I don't think that's what the Deutsche Bank
21 records show. They are doing these in February and March and 22 putting them on February and March statements and they're 23 putting "as of." They're then going out to what are very 24 accomplished tax preparers who were getting February, March
25 statements. And know there was a mistake and are then filing

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 tax returns.

2 At the end of the day, the government's brief takes
3 you at great pains through each of those three backdating
4 transactions. And I should say, quote, backdating
5 transactions. What you learn is what is undisputed is that's
6 what happened. Mistakes in the craziness of this law firm
7 where you were churning these things out every December and 8 taking a portion of the losses into income, the tax loss, in 9 the craziness of that and mistakes were made. And trades were 10 done to try to correct the mistakes. You can't dispute that.

11 The only question at the end of the day, as I say in 12 the papers, is mens rea. And the mens rea when you read the 13 government's evidence, the bottom line is he must have known.
14 And he must have known because he was an accountant.

15 And what we know on that is I think for two years, in 16 the '80s, he was a junior accountant at 20 some thousand
17 dollars a year. There is not a shred of evidence that he ever
18 took a class that taught, quote, the annual accounting rule,
19 and I think the Court knows the Second Circuit precedent that 20 says "must have known" is an argument, but it's not of great 21 weight.

22 And I'll stop with this. I have to say, I wasn't in 23 the must've known category. This wasn't something that I was 24 taught in tax law. Maybe I forgot it and maybe the answer is 25 it's so obvious you didn't have to teach it. But I said to

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 myself the other night, if somebody had said to me, and again I
2 apologize for the example, I won't try to belabor it. But
3 December 28 in year one if I gave 10,000 shares of IBM to a
4 charity and 10,000 shares to my daughter, right, and I said to 5 my broker just move them into those -- 10,000 to charity,
6 10,000 to my daughter. And the broker made a mistake. And 7 here's what makes it so tricky. The shares to the charity were 8 IBM; the shares to my daughter were Philip Morris. They 9 reversed it. The charity calls January 2nd and says we can't 10 take tobacco stock. We can't accept your gift. I call the 11 broker, I say what about this. He says we'll just reverse it.
12 It was our mistake. We'll send the Philip Morris to your 13 daughter and we'll send the IBM to the charity. And they 14 reverse it and they put as of December 28 because they reverse
15 it and do it at December 28 prices and it all shows up on the 16 January statement.

17 If I said to Mr. Parse, if I said to me -- the Court
18 may be situated differently, the Court's been educated by this 19 trial. If I said can I put that tax deduction on my year one
20 return, in that situation, even though it was mistake, it never 21 got accepted, I'd say I don't know, you should ask a tax
22 lawyer. And that's what Mr. Parse said. He made the 23 transactions, he made the change, not a single document at 24 Deutsche Bank reflected that this happened other than the as of 25 which was a reflection of what the pricing was.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 I'm sitting here with a tolling agreement from the
2 Southern District in a case of mine which says as of
3 January 14. Which is faxed on January 16. But everybody
4 wanted it to be effective two days before because that was the 5 agreement, as happens in the Southern District. It happens
6 everywhere. And it doesn't mean backdating. In this case it
7 means this is the price.

8 But all that is a long way of saying there is no proof
9 that he knew this rule. There is no proof it was discussed
10 with him. There is no proof he thought he knew these 11 transactions were wrong. And at the end of the day, when one's 12 argument is he must've known, that's a weak reed, particularly 13 when this prejudice notion is harmless error like. After all,
14 you have Justice Marshall's dissent in Strickland that says it
15 should have been harmless error, it should have been under the 16 government's burden. When you do harmless error analysis, you
17 say two things: What is the nature of the error, and what's 18 the proof. The nature of the error here is that a government
19 partisan out to get him in particular was on the jury. That's 20 a pretty serious error. The proof, far from overwhelming.

21 As I say, I think if I can get you to the prejudice
22 prong, we ought to see you in April and not in January and I
23 hope that's the case.

24 THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Shechtman.

25 Ms. Davis, does the government want to be heard?

CAC3PARC

1 MS. DAVIS: Yes, please, your Honor.

2 Good afternoon, your Honor. I'm glad to see that
3 Mr. Shechtman has conceded that other than this particular
4 area, Mr. Parse did in fact receive what can only be described
5 as a platinum plated defense with a defense team that most 6 defendants can only dream of.

7 MR. SHECHTMAN: I don't think I quite went that far,
8 your Honor.

9 MS. DAVIS: I do think, though, that had Mr. Shechtman
10 been here at trial and seen the forces that were mustered in 11 Mr. Parse's favor, he would have to admit that it is a rare
12 scene in such a courtroom for an individual defendant.

13 Your Honor, the crux of it is that defendant Parse is 14 seeking to be rewarded now for the strategic choices of his 15 attorney regarding Catherine Conrad and their knowledge of her.
16 Choices for which he has already benefited in the form of 17 acquittals on the conspiracy and the tax evasion counts. We 18 submit, as we said in our papers, that we believe that 19 Mr. Shechtman has met neither prong of the Strickland standard
20 in that he cannot show ineffective assistance of counsel and he 21 cannot show prejudice.

22 This Court in its ruling on the motion for new trial
23 regarding Catherine Conrad has already found that the Brune &
24 Richard law firm knew that Catherine Conrad and Juror No. 1
25 were the same person and chose to gamble with the jury that

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 they had. Your Honor, that in our view ends the inquiry
2 completely. That finding alone is sufficient to defeat a
3 finding of ineffective assistance of counsel.

4 The Second Circuit has made very clear, as have other
5 circuits, that you cannot as a defense counsel basically engage 6 in a heads-we-win-tails-you-lose strategy when it comes to your
7 trial conduct. We know that based on the documentary evidence
8 and the evidence that was adduced at the hearing as well as the 9 evidence that was put forth in the affidavit of Susan Brune,
10 that the Brune & Richard law firm had the suspension opinion
11 prior to voir dire, and chose not bring it to this Court's
12 attention. As we all know engaged in subsequent investigation
13 regarding Juror No. 1, when Theresa Trzskoma started to have 14 certain doubts about her after the receipt of Juror No. 1's
15 note.

16 It's quite clear that this is not a case where the 17 defense counsel had been given a piece of information and did
18 nothing. That's quite, quite not what happened here. In fact,
19 we know that prior to voir dire, they discussed the suspension
20 opinion, they chose not to bring it to the Court's attention.
21 Instead relying simply on the voir dire answers, even though as 22 this Court pointed out, far more trivial issues were aired by 23 all of the parties, by the government and indeed by the Court,
24 in terms of trying to figure out who would be good jurors.
25 They chose not to bring that to the Court's attention then

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 which I think is very significant. And it is significant in
2 part because I think if we can say anything, that we all know
3 based on the Brune & Richard's defense of Mr. Parse, that if 4 they had any actual and real concern about a suspended attorney
5 being on this jury, if they really thought that that was not in 6 their client's interest, you know, we all know that they would 7 have brought it to the Court's attention during voir dire. And 8 if not at voir dire, then after the results of the Theresa
9 Trzskoma investigation.

10 This is absolutely a situation where the Brune &
11 Richard lawyers, on May 12, after the investigation that they 12 had, they looked at all the alternatives. We know because 13 Laurie Edelstein testified at the hearing, they considered the 14 three possible alternatives. They considered whether or not 15 they should do more investigation, and Susan Brune said no.
16 They considered whether or not they should bring it to the 17 Court's attention, and they said no. So they decided to do
18 nothing. And it is that conscious and deliberate choice that 19 we believe means that they made a strategic choice that cannot 20 form the basis of ineffective assistance of counsel.

21 How do we know in the government's view that this
22 indeed was a tactical choice? As this Court just pointed out
23 with regard to the questioning of Mr. Shechtman, they did not 24 bring that knowledge to the attention of the Court either in 25 the brief, where they made it appear as if they first learned

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 of this after the receipt of the jury -- of Ms. Conrad's letter
2 to the government in May after the verdict. And worse, even in
3 the conference calls with the Court, they continued to make it
4 appear and resist the Court and the government learning that 5 knowledge.

6 Mr. Shechtman seems to want to characterize this as 7 them wanting to hide their mistakes. But it's quite clear, and 8 Susan Brune and Laurie Edelstein testified, we would not have
9 told this Court but for the Court pressing. That to me speaks
10 of a decision made early on and continuing through the briefing
11 that they wanted the juror on the panel, but they wanted the 12 Court not to know exactly what they knew because they 13 understood, and, as was acknowledged at the hearing, that that 14 was damaging to their client.

15 THE COURT: Would you address the prejudice prong.

16 MS. DAVIS: Yes, your Honor. Your Honor, we believe
17 that there is more than adequate evidence, indeed overwhelming
18 evidence, of defendant Parse's criminal involvement in the 19 corrupt endeavor to obstruct the IRS and in the mail fraud
20 count. The defense conceded in its papers that Mr. Parse was 21 involved in the backdated transactions. We think backdated
22 transactions is a perfectly adequate description of them.

23 We also submit, your Honor, that Mr. Parse's
24 background as a CPA, even a non-practicing CPA, is under case
25 law relevant to his intent and circumstantial evidence of his

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 incident. We know he was instrumental and indeed Carrie Yackee
2 cited to more than a dozen instances during her testimony where 3 she made clear that she was acting at the instructions of and 4 with the knowledge of David Parse in implementing all of these 5 complex and varied transactions that had to be effectuated in 6 order to change the results of the three sets of transactions.
7 It's actually four because Coleman and Blair were two separate
8 taxpayers. She understood that this was being done for tax
9 purposes. This is Carrie Yackee the sales assistant. Nice
10 woman, but not nearly as sophisticated as Mr. Parse. To 11 suggest that the jury could not find or infer that he knew 12 exactly why these transactions were being effectuated, not for 13 any real investment reason, not because they had figured out
14 that in February and March, the year after the transactions had 15 been done, that somehow it would have been a better investment
16 to have not invested in Cisco stock, but instead to have 17 invested in foreign currency. To suggest that the jury could 18 not have found that Mr. Parse knew that the reason that these 19 were being done was to effectuate tax losses for the prior year
20 is simply ludicrous.

21 Your Honor, the defendant was faxed information
22 relating to the tax returns themselves. This wasn't just a
23 one-way street between David Parse's office and Jenkins &
24 Gilchrist, but it was at least a two-way street between 25 Deutsche Bank and Jenkins & Gilchrist and also the accountants.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 So it's quite clear the jury was entitled to infer that he knew
2 that this was being done to change the results of the tax
3 losses. He also knew, and there is more than a plethora of 4 evidence on this, that each of these tax shelter transactions
5 had to be completed by year end. And that's why, as Mr. Bair
6 testified and others testified, it was a real effort.

7 Sandra Burnside, you might recall, Mr. Daugerdas'
8 secretary, testified about the avalanche of work that went on 9 in December at the end of the tax years in order to finalize
10 these transactions. Well, that avalanche of work hit the 11 offices of Mr. Parse's desk. And as Carrie Yackee testified,
12 Carrie Yackee's desk as well.

13 So to suggest that he was not aware this was being 14 done in order to defraud the IRS as the true results of the 15 transaction we submit is unsupportable.

16 There was a suggestion in Mr. Shechtman's brief, I
17 don't think he touched on it today, but the suggestion was that 18 these transactions, these as of transactions were approved by 19 Deutsche Bank.

20 Well, first of all, Carrie Yackee's testimony here
21 that she was going to Mr. Parse for approval on these 22 transactions. There is also no evidence to suggest that anyone
23 other than Mr. Parse and Carrie Yackee at Deutsche Bank knew 24 the full picture of what went on, which was that these 25 transactions for these particular taxpayers were tax shelter

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 transactions that had to be done by the end of the year, that
2 had been done by the end of the year, pursuant to instructions
3 that had been given by Jenkins & Gilchrist to Deutsche Bank,
4 had been implemented properly by Mr. Parse in the first
5 instance, and now were being requested to redo them to achieve
6 a different result.

7 This I think is a distinction that makes
8 Mr. Shechtman's example of the broker's mistake an apple to our 9 orange or an orange to our apple, which is that this is not an 10 instance where Mr. Parse takes an instruction from a client and 11 screws it up. Implements it wrong. Rather, they did 12 everything that they were supposed to do the way it was 13 supposed to be done, and there are results to show for that.
14 It's only because the tax loss that they wanted to get from 15 these results was not correct that it required anything to be 16 done after the end of the year.

17 We suggest that the evidence was overwhelming to 18 support Mr. Parse's knowing and criminal involvement in both
19 the corrupt endeavor to obstruct and impede the IRS and in mail
20 fraud.

21 THE COURT: Anything further?

22 MS. DAVIS: Your Honor, there are other pieces of 23 evidence which we've detailed in our briefing but which I will 24 not go through again here.

25 I did want to just note though that the Second Circuit
SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.
(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 has stated that you can find that where there has been a split
2 verdict, as is the case with Mr. Parse, that is evidence of a
3 lack of prejudice. We had argued in the original motion for 4 new trial and we renew that as well.

5 Finally, your Honor, with regard to the letter of 6 Catherine Conrad to the government which was referenced in the 7 defendant's briefing, she talked about their discussions and 8 deliberations with regard to David Parse. And interestingly
9 what she also said, which was not mentioned by Mr. Shechtman in 10 his brief, was that that struggle ended when they asked the 11 Court to reread the definitions of wilfully and knowingly.
12 Different states for different counts.

13 MR. SHECHTMAN: Well, I'll wait. I apologize to the 14 Court.

15 MS. DAVIS: And interestingly, their verdict exactly 16 tracked that difference between wilfully, this was required in 17 the conspiracy count and for the tax evasion counts, and 18 knowingly which was really the mens rea relating to other ones.
19 So you might say that they had a struggle.

20 To the extent we can even be considering that letter
21 at all because of Rule 606(b), but I think it's quite clear
22 that they made a deliberate and informed decision about making
23 a distinction drawn on the evidence as apply to the law. Thank 24 you.

25 THE COURT: Thank you, Ms. Davis.
SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.
(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 Mr. Shechtman, do you want to be heard further?
2 MR. SHECHTMAN: I will and I will try to be brief,
3 Judge. I think really four points. The government has 4 repeated at the argument here what it said in its brief. Which 5 was that Mr. Parse benefited from the strategic choice that his 6 clients made and I'll hold the strategic choice point for 7 second. But I take that to mean that he got acquitted here
8 because she was on the jury. And that, my father used to say
9 arguments were nonsense on stilts, and that is nonsense on 10 stilts. I mean, your Honor knows exactly what happened here.
11 There was a partisan in the jury room, a woman who couldn't 12 follow instructions and the like. Your opinion couldn't be 13 stronger on the point. And she was fighting the good fight to 14 convict him on 100 percent.
15 So to say we got the benefit of having her on there 16 because we were acquitted isn't worthy, respectfully, of the 17 government.
18 And the related point this was a split verdict, it is 19 a split verdict because she couldn't carry the ball as far as 20 she wanted to, but not because Mr. Parse benefited by her
21 presence.
22 The second thing I'd say is this. I take it there are 23 two competing visions of what happened here, and at the end of 24 the day, your Honor is going to have to decide. One is that 25 what happened in that court, your Honor, in the plaza, is that

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.
(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 what was said was, look, don't be stupid, it can't be her, to
2 do any more would be a waste of the court's time. That's what
3 I think happened. That's what I think the record shows.

4 The other is, let's be smart. She'll be a great juror
5 because she is a suspended lawyer. Or, let's be smart. If we
6 leave her on, we get two bites at the apple. The latter two I
7 think are strategic, but be careful in the following sense.
8 The first one is a choice. It is a choice to do nothing. You
9 cannot have a case in which there is not in a sense a choice if 10 it's coming up in an ineffective assistance claim. I can cite
11 you to Breakiron and Johnson v. Armontrout. In our brief
12 lawyers are making choices. In those cases the question is are 13 they informed choices, are they reasonable choices, are they 14 competent choices, are they strategic choices. And if the 15 choice is don't be stupid, it can't be her, that is not a 16 strategic choice, that is a tragic misjudgment. Implicit in 17 the word "misjudgment" is that someone's making a choice. But 18 if it is a tragic misjudgment, I think it's ineffective
19 assistance.

20 The next thing I'd say is this. We're told that there
21 can't be any doubt that these transactions were effectuated so
22 that there would be tax lawyers and tax losses in the prior 23 year and it's ludicrous to think otherwise. Of course that's 24 why the transactions were being done. There is no doubt that's 25 why these transactions were being done in February or March.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

CAC3PARC

1 But the real question is, did Mr. Parse know that that was
2 defrauding the government. Right.

3 Look, the avalanche of work here was in December. But 4 the question is, if you made a mistake, like in my example, can
5 you undo it. And you have to appreciate what the government
6 has said to you today. It has essentially said if it is a
7 broker's mistake, like in my hypothetical, then maybe a
8 reasonable broker could think you could undo it. But if it is 9 a lawyer's mistake, you can't. And that's a very different
10 version of the annual accounting rule than I've ever heard
11 before. Right. And if my hypothetical is one in which a

Re: United States v. David Parse, et al., 09 Cr. 581 (WHP)

Dear Judge Pauley:

This letter is respectfully submitted on behalf of David Parse, who is scheduled to be sentenced for tax-related crimes on March 22, 2013. For the reasons discussed below, we believe that a non-incarcerative sentence would be a fair and parsimonious one. See United States v. Dorvee, 616 F.3d 174, 182 (2d Cir. 2010) (“it is the sentencing court’s duty to impose a sentence sufficient, but not greater than necessary to comply with the specific purposes set forth at 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2)”).

A. Background

David Parse was born in Detroit, Michigan, on December 7, 1961. He was the youngest of five children of Sylvia and Henry Parse. A World War II veteran, David’s father worked two jobs for most of his life. He was a mailman by day, and a factory worker at night. David’s mother worked part-time as a laundress in a local restaurant. The two parents instilled in their children the importance of work, education, family and respect for others. See letter of Bridget Rodgers (“Dave comes from a blue-collar background; his dad was a mailman and his mom was a saint”).¹

David attended local Catholic schools, where he excelled in academics and sports. See letter of Scott Mordell (“David was an academic, sports and social leader among our [high school] class”). He started on the varsity basketball team as a freshman and was among the top players in the state his senior year. Although recruited by several colleges, he chose to attend the University of Michigan, a state school, and gave up playing organized sports.

What he did not give up was his work ethic. David got his first job at age 11, delivering the Detroit News to his neighbors. Every day after school and on weekends, he rode his bicycle on his route. In eighth grade, he began working part-time in a local restaurant as a busboy (the same restaurant where his mother cleaned linens). He worked there on weekends during the school year and 30 to 40 hours a week in the summer. The job enabled him to purchase a used car for $600. With a car, he could drive across town to work at a famous seafood restaurant; beginning his senior year in high school, it became his regular employer.

David graduated from Michigan in 1984 with a bachelor’s degree in Business Administration. He put himself through college, commuting from Ann Arbor to Detroit to work as a waiter in the seafood restaurant. Although most of his time went to studies and work, David enjoyed his college years immensely, and many of his closest friends are Michigan classmates. To this day, he “tailgates” with friends before Michigan football games and donates generously to the school. See letter of Kenneth Norwick (our “tailgate [group] . . . has become like an extended family . . . focused on the children”); letter of Bridget Rodgers (“[e]ven though he has never mentioned it, I know [David] has been a generous donor to the University”).

B. Business Degree and Brokerage Industry Employment

After graduating from Michigan, David worked two years at Touche Ross as an accountant, doing audits for local businesses and not-for-profit institutions. In August 1986, he left the firm and reenrolled in Michigan to get an MBA degree. Again, he paid his own way. He lived at home, commuted to school, and went back to waiting tables. He graduated in 1988 with a major in Finance and Economics and obtained employment at Goldman Sachs in Detroit as a broker.

From 1988 to his indictment in 2009, David enjoyed considerable success as an investment consultant for institutions and high net worth individuals. When Goldman left Detroit, David moved to Kidder Peabody in Troy, Michigan, and then to Credit Suisse First Boston in Chicago. In 1995, he was recruited to join Alex Brown & Sons, which was subsequently acquired by Bankers Trust and then Deutsche Bank. The name on the front door changed, but David’s responsibilities did not.

As a broker, David had 30 to 40 long-term customers, and his goal was to assist them to invest their money wisely. A former business associate writes this about him:

[A]t the Chicago offices of Credit Suisse First Boston . . . I interacted with David on a constant basis during our tenure at the firm. I literally could overhear his phone calls with clients In all of [our] interactions I found David to be diligent, intelligent, and most of all honest. David always put his client's interests first, and prided himself on his ability to protect [their] assets. He took very seriously his fiduciary duty, and our entire group relied upon him as a sounding board when evaluating the appropriateness of investment vehicles. As an example of how much I trust David in business, years ago I asked him to consult on the endowment fund for an inner city high school that I oversee [As] you can imagine . . . I would only ask David to participate if I was completely convinced of his character.

Letter of Phil Allen.

Others who have worked with David sound the same theme. See letter of Jeffrey DeYoung (he would "always put clients first and do the right thing; when the market was starting to unravel . . . Dave was the first to pull his clients out in spite of his loss of revenue"); letter of Susan Manske ("[i]n my opinion, Dave has always been a straight shooter, a conservative investor protecting his clients from downside risk, [and] a staunch supporter of ethical behavior"); letter of John and Kathyne McGuire ("David chose the securities business so that he could help his clients protect their assets; he truly understood his fiduciary obligations and [put] his client's interest first"). In all his years as a broker, David received no complaints from his customers for his investment advice.²

² David has been sued by several taxpayers whose tax shelters were disallowed.

In 1998, David was introduced to Paul Daugerdas; his relationship with Daugerdas and the Jenkins & Gilchrist firm is discussed in Part D below.

C. Family, Community and Friends

David met Theresa Austerberry in 1987, when they were at business school together, and they have been married for 20 years. They have supported each other's careers -- when Theresa found a better position at McKinsey's Chicago office, David left Kidder Peabody to move with her -- and have devoted themselves to family and community. They have three boys -- ages 17, 15, and 12 -- whom they have raised conscientiously. The letter of David's brother-in-law, James Yetter, describes it best:

[David's] three sons (my nephews) are wonderful young men with exceptional character traits that I know are a direct result of Dave's strong parenting [H]e treats them with a very good combination of love, caring and high expectations. They all have chores to do and household responsibilities. They are expected to have jobs in the summer. They have a healthy regard and respect for others. Study time is sacred. Responsibilities are not to be taken lightly. It's not "enforced," it's an expectation.

Letter of James W. Yetter.

Other letters confirm Mr. Yetter's observations. See letter of Andrew Miller ("[h]is emphasis and influence on his children have also resulted in good, respectful, well-rounded and academic kids"); letter of Phil Allen (David "teaches by example, and extolls the values of hard work and mutual respect; everyone pitches in, whether it is preparing a family meal or helping a younger sibling . . . do [his] homework”); letter of Thomas E. Carnaghi (David “is truly a model father [who] sets the bar high for his boys”).³

For the past 15 years, David has devoted much of his free time to coaching youth sports teams in his community. In his letter to the Court, Phil Allen describes the depth of David’s commitment:

In our town’s Little League Baseball organization, David has held every volunteer position from an assistant coach to a team manager. I have seen him do everything from raking baseball fields . . . to throwing batting practice During basketball season, David has also been the coach or assistant coach for numerous grammar school teams. If there is one example of the depth of David’s commitment to coaching, it is the basketball training sessions he designed and managed for students outside of the organized teams he coached. On his own initiative, David arranged for a gym to be available during the week for all children, even those who didn’t make a team There are not many of us . . . who would find the time to make such an impact on the lives of the children in their community.

Letter of Phil Allen; see also letter of John and Kathy Maguire (“[c]oaching children is often a difficult and thankless job in a small community; David has been a leader in Hinsdale in volunteering his time and knowledge to help our community”).

³ As the Presentence Report notes, Theresa has had serious health problems since 2008. In February 2008, Theresa began experiencing severe dizziness, and the episodes often lasted hours and sometimes days. Neck pain, heart palpitations and stomach pain followed. See letter of Theresa Parse. A battery of tests has proven negative, and medication and a change of diet have given her some relief. But health issues, which may be stress-related, continue to plague her.

ZUCKERMAN SPAEDER LLP

The Honorable William H. Pauley, III

As the letters reflect, coaching for David is about more than teaching a 12-year-old to turn a double play. “He wants the kids to develop their athletic . . . skills and [for them] to be as successful . . . as possible, but he clearly believes that there are things more important than winning games.” Letter of Charles Austerberry; see also letter of Theresa Parse (“Dave understands how sports can teach children valuable life lessons”). David relates to each child individually and gives each a chance to play. When a boy with severe disabilities was on the basketball team, David “made sure every other boy . . . went out of [his] way to . . . help him make a basket before the end of the season.” Id. As one observer notes, David’s “measured, personal approach contrasts markedly with the loud cacophony typically employed by [those] . . . who attempt to coach [children’s] sports teams.” Letter of Charles Austerberry.⁴

What may best reflect David’s character is his commitment to his friends. In their letters to the Court, many of them recount stories of David’s support in their times of need. See e.g., letter of Bridget Rodgers (when I was pregnant and “told I had an infection that would cause

⁴ One parent whose child is a gifted athlete writes this about David:

The thing that has endeared me most to Dave is the way he coaches the boys in basketball. Over the years, he has coached . . . my son [REDACTED]. . . . [Dave] is always calm, guiding, teaching and encouraging the boys in a way that is so helpful. Dave has gone out of his way to tell my wife Kimberly and me how special [REDACTED] is as an athlete and he encourages us to continue his development. The vast majority of coaches in our community are screamers and not teachers and are singularly focused on their [own] kids. Dave is different. I sincerely appreciate the many hours Dave has spent with my son.

horrific birth defects, Dave cried openly with us” and discussed the “moral, ethical and emotional dilemmas this raised”); letter of James Yetter (“[w]hen our friend’s daughter was on her death bed, Dave . . . flew in from Chicago . . . to provide support”); letter of Andrew Miller (“when my son was diagnosed and hospitalized with a mental illness . . . , David was there to . . . counsel and encourage me”); letter of Thomas Carnaghi (when “my then 12 year old daughter had a brain aneurysm burst . . . [David] drove in from Chicago to spend time with me and my family; he spoke with me every day during the three plus weeks of this ordeal”). As one friend puts it, “Dave is a giver, not a taker; if you need some help, he is the friend you can call.” Letter of Kenneth Norwick.

Notably, David’s good deeds have involved his time and effort and not his money. Nor has he sought recognition for what he has done. Just the opposite is true: he has been reluctant to ask others to write on his behalf because asking for something in return has never been his way. See United States v. Cooper, 394 F.3d 172, 177 (3d Cir. 2005)(noting that defendant’s actions were not “detached acts of charity . . . [but were] in a very real way, hands-on personal sacrifices, which have had a . . . positive impact on the lives of others”).

D. The Instant Offense

As noted above, David met Paul Daugerdas in 1998, but the relationship between Deutsche Bank and Daugerdas began earlier. In the early 1990’s, Jason Shih was one of a group of brokers in Alex Brown’s San Francisco office, who began executing bond shorts for Daugerdas’ clients. When Shih was transferred to Chicago to supervise the office, he continued the relationship. Shih introduced David and his partner Rod McKay to Daugerdas, and they began doing business.

The Honorable William H. Pauley, III

As the Court knows, Deutsche Bank's participation in the tax shelters was approved at the bank's highest levels.⁵ That fact, coupled with the prominence of the Jenkins firm and the knowledge that other law and accounting firms were marketing similar products, gave David comfort that the tax shelters were lawful. Like many others, he believed that Daugerdas and his partners had found a "loophole" that could be exploited until it was closed. From 1998 to 2001, tax shelter trades became a part of David's business.

As we see it, the jury accepted the proposition that David was not a culpable participant in the overall Jenkins tax shelter scheme. His acquittal on the tax conspiracy count and the substantive tax evasion counts (and the complete acquittal of his co-defendant Craig Brubaker) confirm the point. The jury, it seems, concluded that David did not know that a lack of economic substance made the Jenkins shelters illegal. If that is correct, then David's convictions for mail fraud and tax obstruction reflect his involvement in the three "backdating" transactions. In each instance, trades effected in one year (e.g., 2002) were used to generate tax losses in the prior year (e.g., 2001). The prosecution focused on those transactions in its summations, as did the jury in its deliberations.⁶

E. Guidelines Calculation

In its preliminary Report, the Probation Office calculates an offense level of 40 and a Guidelines range of 292 to 365 months. It assumes a tax loss amount of $1.5 billion and adds “points” for sophisticated means (§ 2T1.1(b)(2)) and special skill (§ 3B1.3). We have written to Probation and asked it to reconsider that calculation. Under the Court’s rules, its final Report is due after ours, and so we summarize here our argument that the Guidelines range should be far lower than where Probation has preliminarily put it.

⁶ Juror No. 1’s letter to AUSA Okula goes far to show that David’s conviction was only for the “backdating” transactions:

[W]e did have qualms with Mr. David Parse. I solely held out for two days on the conspiracy charge for him -- I wanted to convict 100%, (not only on that charge) -- but on Tuesday, May 24, 2011, we had asked for the Judge’s clarification of “willfully” and “knowingly”, I believe, and I had to throw in the towel. I did fight the good fight, however, and I felt that Mr. Parse played his integral part and was a key element in the elaborate scheme/scam. The backdating was enough for the other charges.

Letter of Catherine Conrad 5/25/11 (emphasis added).

The Honorable William H. Pauley, III

Our lower Guidelines calculation begins from the premise that Mr. Parse was convicted only of the three “backdating” transactions. If that is so, then the proper loss calculation is this:

Coleman	$2,738,630
Blair	$ 470,035
Aronoff	$ 536,770
Toporek	$ 62,553
TOTAL	$3,807,988

These numbers are based on the additional assessments calculated by the IRS, which are in evidence.

Moreover, if the Guidelines calculation is based only upon the three “backdating” transactions, then the enhancement for “sophisticated means” should not apply. While it is true that the tax shelters created fraudulent tax losses through a series of complex transactions, the “backdating” involved only correcting certain trades -- e.g., canceling a transaction in stock and effecting one in foreign currency. The new transactions were shown in Deutsche Bank’s books in the month in which they occurred. No records were altered. Thus, this is not an instance of “hiding assets or transactions, or both, through the use of fictitious entities, corporate shells, or offshore financial accounts.” See Commentary § 2T1.1 Application Note 4.

Likewise, an enhancement for “special skills” under § 3B1.3 is unwarranted. The Report states that Mr. Parse “used his special skills as a former stock broker and CPA to materially facilitate his design and implementation of the highly-complex financial products that were involved in different tax shelters.” ¶ 64. Mr. Parse, however, had no role in designing the tax shelters and did not function as a CPA. He gave no investment advice, and the trades were executed by his assistant. In short, his role as a broker in the three “backdating” transactions is too thin a reed to support this enhancement.

If all of this is correct, then Mr. Parse should be at offense level 24, with a Guidelines range of 51 to 63 months. Of course, we believe that even that calculation produces a range that is still far too harsh. See, e.g., Smirlock v. United States, 2005 U.S. Dist. Lexis 7321 at *6 (noting that “the amount of loss that actually winds up resulting from a person’s conduct . . . can be arbitrary” and may not reflect culpability); Bowman, The Failure of the Federal Sentencing Guidelines: A Structural Analysis, 105 Colum L. Rev. 1315, 1328 (2005)(“[a]t or near the root of virtually every serious criticism of the guidelines is the concern that they are too harsh”).

F. Conclusion

In her sentencing submission, Donna Guerin catalogued the sentences that have been imposed on those who designed and marketed illegal tax shelters. See Guerin’s Am. Sentencing Mem. 13-16, ECF No. 592. They have varied greatly in length. What makes this case different is that David Parse did not design or market tax shelters; he was a broker executing trades. Indeed, to our knowledge, of all of the brokers who performed that function for Jenkins and other law firms, he and Craig Brubaker were the only two people who were prosecuted, and he is the only one who stands convicted.

As noted above, we believe that the jury convicted David for his involvement in three backdating transactions from which he barely profited. He has already suffered greatly for that conduct. Since 2004, when the criminal investigation commenced, this matter has hung over him. His once-thriving brokerage business has collapsed. His wife's health has suffered. See supra n.3. His children have felt the sting of comments from others who have learned of David's conviction. And the stigma of the conviction haunts David, especially because it is antithetical to the values with which he was raised. See letter of Theresa Parse ("our lives [have] essentially [been] placed on hold, as we try to raise our three sons in a safe and secure environment").

More than 15 years ago, the United States Supreme Court reminded that the "uniform and constant . . . tradition for the sentencing judge [is] to consider every convicted person as an individual and every case as a unique study in the human failings that sometimes mitigate, sometimes magnify, the crime and the punishment to ensue." Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 113 (1996). In this submission, we have tried to show that David Parse is a fundamentally decent man. He believes in family, hard work, helping others, and being actively involved in community. The conduct for which he was convicted, we believe, was at the periphery of the Jenkins scheme. On this record, we respectfully submit that a non-incarcerative sentence would be just. It would not diminish respect for the law. See United States v. Adelson, 441 F.Supp.2d 506, 513-14 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) ("if ever a man is to receive credit for the good he has done, and his immediate misconduct assessed in the context of his overall life hitherto, it should be at the moment of his sentencing").⁷

We recognize that custodial sentences are qualitatively more severe than probationary sentences of equivalent terms. Offenders on probation are nonetheless subject to several standard conditions that substantially restrict their liberty. Probationers may not leave the judicial district, move, or change jobs without notifying, and in some cases receiving permission from, their probation officer or the court. They must report regularly to their probation officer, permit unannounced visits to their homes, refrain from associating with any person convicted of a felony, and refrain from excessive drinking. Most probationers are also subject to individual "special conditions" imposed by the court.

AMENDED SENTENCING MEMORANDUM OF THE UNITED STATES REGARDING DEFENDANT DAVID PARSE

The United States respectfully submits this memorandum for the Court’s consideration in connection with the sentencing of defendant David Parse (“Parse” or “the defendant”), which is scheduled for March 22, 2013 at 2:30 p.m.

Preliminary Statement

Following an eleven-week trial that included over 1300 exhibits, 41 witnesses, eight days of jury deliberations, and 46 jury notes, the jury on May 24, 2011 convicted David Parse on one count of corruptly obstructing and impeding the due administration of the Internal Revenue Laws in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7212(a) (Count Twenty of the Redacted S3 Indictment), and one count of mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 2 (Count Twenty-Five of the Redacted S3 Indictment). The jury acquitted Parse of the conspiracy count and three counts of tax evasion. Those convictions stemmed from David Parse’s integral role in one of the largest tax fraud schemes ever charged, the details of which are spelled out in the indictment against him, S3 09 Cr. 581 (WHP), and the trial record. Incorporating the factual allegations in the conspiracy count, Count Twenty charged Parse, Donna Guerin, Denis Field and Craig Brubaker with a wide-ranging corrupt endeavor to obstruct and impede the IRS in connection with the design, marketing, implementation, and defense of four tax shelters known as Short Sale, Short Option, SWAPS, and HOMER. Likewise incorporating the factual allegations of the conspiracy count, Count Twenty-Five charged Parse, along with Paul Daugerdas, Guerin, Field, and Brubaker, with mail fraud as to the overarching scheme to defraud the IRS through the design, marketing, implementation, and defense of the Jenkins & Gilchrist tax shelters.

The proof at trial demonstrated that Parse — an investment representative at Deutsche Bank Alex Brown and certified public accountant — participated as a key actor in the largest criminal tax fraud in history. That fraud, which featured Parse’s five-year involvement in four fraudulent tax shelters, resulted in the creation of over $7 billion of fraudulent tax deductions or benefits, $1.6 billion in Guidelines tax loss, and well in excess of $230 million in actual loss to the United States Treasury. Parse’s role in the fraud - as one of the principal Deutsche Bank employees who steered bank clients to the J&G tax shelters, established the evanescent brokerage accounts for those shelters, executed the crucial Treasury short sale and options “investments,” executed the pivotal transfers between accounts, and who helped facilitate the fashioning of the options and other financial instruments used in the shelters - was indispensable to the shelters’ success. Consequently, Parse earned substantial commission income from his role in the tax shelters — over $3 million.

For the reasons spelled out below and in the Probation Department Presentence Investigation Report (“PSR”), we submit that Parse’s conduct, and the resulting harm, is deserving of a significant prison sentence.

I. RELEVANT FACTS¹

A. Defendant's Educational Background and Work History

Parse obtained his bachelor's degree in business administration from the University of Michigan in 1984 and his Master's degree in business administration from the same school in 1988. PSR ¶¶ 89-90. Parse also was a licensed stockbroker and investment adviser, and passed various securities and investment adviser exams. From 1988 to 1995, Parse acted as an investment adviser at Goldman Sachs, Kidder Peabody, and Credit Suisse First Boston. From 1995 through April 2006, Parse was employed as an investment representative at Deutsche Bank Alex Brown in its Chicago office. From April 2006 to the present, Parse has been self-employed at his company Union Capital LLC, a financial consulting firm, which is currently dormant.

B. The Offense Conduct

The facts concerning Parse's offense conduct will not be repeated herein at length, as those facts are comprehensively set forth in the trial record and the PSR. Accordingly, we are confident that, as a result of the foregoing and the submissions made by the parties, the Court is thoroughly familiar with the scope and nature of the defendant's criminal conduct.

Several aspects of that offense conduct bear additional discussion.

1. Parse's Participation in the Fraudulent Kasperzak/Calphalon Tax Shelter

Parse assisted in advising the shareholders of the Calphalon cookware company (primarily members of the Kasperzak family, owners of the company, and several key employees) on the orderly disposition of their shares of Newell stock acquired in a stock swap as a result of the sale of the Calphalon company to Newell. Parse was introduced to Peter Barnhart, Calphalon's Executive Vice-President, Sara Jane Kasperzak, Dean Kasperzak, and other members of the Kasperzak family in 1998. As a result of the work that Parse was doing in helping the Calphalon stockholders dispose of their Newell shares, Parse became aware of the large taxable gains that the stockholders would receive. In a meeting at Parse's office, Parse introduced Peter Barnhart to Paul Dagerdas (then an Alheimer & Gray partner) for the purpose of having Dagerdas pitch a J&G tax shelter to the Calphalon shareholders. Parse subsequently attended a meeting with Dagerdas, the Calphalon shareholders, and several attorneys from the law firm of Shumaker Loop & Kendrick. In that meeting and in Parse's presence, as Dean Kasperzak testified at trial, Dagerdas opened with the red-flag statement that the information that he was about to provide was completely confidential and that the shareholders could not even share it with the shareholders' own investment advisors or accountants. (Tr. 6243). Dagerdas then described the tax shelter which he said would result in the shareholders' paying virtually no taxes on the gains. Kasperzak further testified, "We were told that the profit potential was very low and that going forward, should we choose to go forward, if we were questioned about the matter, that our intent was in fact to make a profit, but in order for this tax shelter to work, there had to be, in effect, a loss to balance off the gains from the stock sale."² (Tr. 6244). The urging by Dagerdas for the shareholders to make false statements about their intent is wholly inconsistent with good faith – all of which Parse witnessed.

² The testimony of Erwin Mayer and other trial witnesses made clear that the expected short-term duration of the Treasury note transactions, combined with the lack of volatility of the specific Treasury notes chosen for the transactions, meant that the short sale was virtually certain to produce only a small loss or gain on this purported "investment."

2. Parse's Personal Tax Evasion

Parse executed his own fraudulent SOS tax shelter transaction to eliminate the gains he earned in 2000, and received a free fraudulent opinion letter from J&G. The losses Parse created — $3,000,000 — were larger than Parse needed for the 2000 year, suggesting that he intended to eliminate taxes in more than one year. On his 2000 tax return, Parse claimed a $1,278,706 fraudulent loss, evading $517,542 in taxes on over $2.1 million in income. See GX 1001-132 (Parse 2000 Tax Return); GX 1000-52 (IRS Certificate of Assessment and Payments for Parse's 2000 Taxes); GX 54-1 (J&G Opinion Letter for Parse). Parse's receipt of a free opinion letter, which would have otherwise cost him no less than $90,000 (and likely more)³ had he paid the going rate for a J&G opinion letter, violated Deutsche Bank's gift prohibition policy and almost certainly violated the law, in that it constituted his receipt of an unlawful commission or gift by a bank official. See 18 U.S.C. § 215 (unlawful for any bank employee to accept anything of value intended to be rewarded in connection with business of bank).

3. Parse's Participation in the Fraudulent Backdating of Transactions

As detailed in paragraphs 44-52 of the PSR, Parse's conduct involved not only assisting in the design, marketing, and implementation of the fraudulent J&G tax shelters, but also the implementation of fraudulently backdated when Donna Guerin and others at J&G realized that the shelters had been implemented incorrectly, or not consistent with the clients' wishes with respect to ³ Parse executed a $3,000,000 short options deal through J&G. Using a conservative 3% fee results in a $90,000 opinion letter value. Parse only deducted just over $1.2 million of the $3,000,000 in losses on his 2000 return, and thus had available just under $1.8 million in losses to use on future tax returns. Although Parse ultimately did not utilize those additional losses (because he reversed his own transaction when the IRS began investigating), the proper view of Parse's own fraudulent transaction should take into account the full amount of fraudulent benefit he produced.

the amount or nature of the tax loss.

The facts concerning all of the backdating will not be repeated at length herein. It is useful to note, however, the following facts as they relate to Parse: (i) Parse was the key to the success of the backdated transactions — without his agreement and participation, the J&G attorneys were powerless to correct the mistakes; (ii) the corrections needed for the Aronoff transactions are reflected in David Parse’s own handwriting on GX 401-99 (reflecting the original transaction) and GX 401-100 (reflecting the revised transaction), showing that he fully understood the nature of the backdating; (iii) the correction of the transactions required a complex series of steps, including reversals of transfers of assets between accounts, reversals of already-completed stock and foreign currency transactions, and execution of new “as of” foreign currency and stock trades; and (iv) the backdating occurred with not just one client, but several and occurred in two different tax years — tax year 2000 for the Aronoff family members, and tax year 2001 for Michael Toporek, Greg Blair, and Matthew Coleman.

In his sentencing memorandum, Parse attempts to excuse the backdating by claiming, “He gave no investment advice, and the trades were executed by his assistant.” (Parse Sent. Mem. at 12). This statement is not only a shameless attempt by Parse to throw his subordinate under the bus, but also a testament as to just how perverted these tax shelters were that the investment broker, who otherwise touts his treatment of his long-time clients, (id. at 4 “As a broker, David had 30 to 40 long-term customers, and his goal was to assist them to invest their money wisely.”), now attempts to make much of the fact that he was not giving investment advice to the backdating clients (or, as the evidence showed, to any of the other tax shelter clients). As to Parse’s suggestion that the backdating transactions were done not by Parse, but by Carrie Yackee, his sales assistant (Parse Sentencing Mem. at 12), the evidence showed and Yackee testified persistently, consistently, and credibly that she acted at all times at the instruction of David Parse. Given the foregoing, Parse's attempt to blame her for his criminal conduct is inconsistent with the facts; it is also, in a larger sense, inexcusable.

To the extent that Parse trial and current counsel have suggested and continue to suggest that the backdating transactions were approved by Deutsche Bank, the only approvals were from Parse himself, and on some of the trade tickets, the signature of the branch manager appears.⁴ Moreover, there is no evidence that the branch manager knew of the purpose and animus for the backdated transactions. To the extent that a branch manager actually knew what was occurring, that fact would only render the branch manager a co-conspirator, and not excuse Parse's criminal conduct.

However complex the tax shelters, the fraudulent backdating was nothing more than garden-variety fraud committed to achieve impermissible tax results. Basic principles of tax reporting — such as the annual accounting rule — prohibit the changing of tax results through transactions carried out after the close of the tax year. Carrie Yackee testified that she understood, based on her

⁴ Yackee made clear that the "Deutsche Bank approvals" on the backdated transaction were actually instructions from David Parse:

Q. You also testified about acting in accordance with Deutsche Bank policy, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Are you aware what Deutsche Bank's policy is for the use of as of dates on trades?

A. I don't know of the specific policy.

Q. How do you know you acted in accordance with the policy?

A. I was directed what to do by my boss.

Q. So when you say you acted in accordance with policy, you mean you followed your boss's orders?

A. And I presumed that he would follow policy. So . . .

(Tr. 5699).

conversations with David Parse, that the steps of the transactions had to be completed by the end of the year to achieve the tax benefits. Given this clear legal imperative, Parse's willingness to participate in such conduct can only be viewed as brazen misconduct.

C. The Indictment, Trial, New Trial Rulings, and the PSR

On March 4, 2010, the grand jury returned a third superseding Indictment charging Parse, Guerin, Daugerdas, Mayer, and Brubaker in thirty-one counts. Parse in particular was charged with a conspiracy to defraud the IRS, to commit tax evasion, and to commit mail and wire fraud (Count One), as well as three counts of tax evasion relating to the tax shelter transactions of three separate tax shelter clients (Counts Seventeen, Eighteen, and Nineteen). Parse was also charged in Counts Twenty and Twenty-Five with engaging in a corrupt endeavor to obstruct and impede the IRS and mail fraud, respectively, essentially through the same conduct underlying the Count One conspiracy charge.

On February 28, 2011, trial commenced against Parse and his co-defendants. On May 24, 2011, the jury found Parse guilty on Counts Twenty and Twenty-Five, and not guilty on Count One and Counts Seventeen through Nineteen. Subsequently, the Court denied Parse motions for new trial based on juror misconduct and ineffective assistance of counsel. As a result of Parse's convictions, he faces a maximum of 23 years in prison.

In connection with Parse's sentencing, the Probation Office has prepared a Presentence Investigation Report (the "PSR"), which calculates the defendant's Sentencing Guidelines offense levels. As calculated by Probation, the final offense level is 40, calling for a Sentencing Guidelines sentence at the statutory maximum, 23 years' imprisonment. PSR ¶ 103. The breakdown of Parse's Guidelines calculation is as follows:

- A base offense level of 36 pursuant to §§ 2T1.9, 2T1.1, and 2T4.1 (tax table). PSR ¶ 62.
- An increase of 2 levels pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(b)(2) because the offense involved sophisticated means. PSR ¶ 63.
- An increase of 2 levels pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3 because the defendant used his skills as a broker and CPA to materially facilitate his design and implementation of the highly-complex financial products that were involved in the different tax shelters. PSR ¶ 64.

Parse has no criminal history points. Thus, with a final offense level of 40, Parse's Guidelines analysis, according to the PSR, yields a final advisory Guidelines range of 292-365 months. However, due to the combined statutory maxima of Counts Twenty and Twenty-Five, the Guidelines term of imprisonment is limited to 276 months. PSR ¶ 103.

D. The Objections to the PSR

Parse has leveled three objections to the calculation of the Guidelines: specifically, to (i) the loss calculations for Guidelines purposes; (ii) the application of the sophisticated means enhancement, and (iii) the application of the use of a special skill. Parse objects to being held responsible, for Guidelines loss calculations purposes, for the full amount of loss generated by the corrupt endeavor and scheme to defraud the Internal Revenue Service. Parse argues that "a fair reading of the jury's verdict is that Parse was convicted only for his role in what the [Presentence] Report describes as three instances of fraudulent 'backdating.'"

Defendant Parse's position is contrary to law and has no basis in reliable fact. First, Parse's contention that he is being held responsible for acquitted conduct ignores the fact that he was convicted on the broad corrupt endeavor and scheme to defraud. Indeed, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals has held as follows:

Under § 1B1.3(a), the court, in calculating a defendant's offense level, was to take into account, inter alia, the defendant's own acts and omissions, see id. § 1B1.3(a)(1)(A), as well as "all reasonably foreseeable acts and omissions of others in furtherance of the jointly undertaken criminal activity," id. § 1B1.3(a)(1)(B), and "all harm that resulted from the acts and omissions specified in subsection[] (a) (1) . . . above, and all harm that was the object of such acts and omissions," id. § 1B1.3(a)(3) (emphasis added).

Appx. 96, 98, 2009 WL 2901565, at *1 (2d Cir. 2009) (summary order) (rejecting defendant's claim that he be held liable only for the fraudulent transactions in which he was directly involved; loss should be based on foreseeable loss from fraudulent scheme); United States v. Singh, 390 F.3d 168, 192 (2d Cir. 2004) (court upheld finding of full loss for sentencing guidelines purposes, despite some acquittals: "It matters not that various phases of the execution of the scheme were rejected by the jury for reason or reasons unknown. Singh's opinions regarding the legality of his billing practices were rejected by the jury, which clearly found the existence of an overall fraudulent scheme."); United States v. Zichittello, 208 F.3d 72 (2d Cir. 2000) (upholding loss computations in RICO case: "As to the campaign finance scheme, Hartman is liable as a co-conspirator for 'all reasonably foreseeable acts and omissions' in furtherance of the conspiracy. U.S.S.G. § 1B1.3(a)(1)(B). Because there was evidence that Hartman was well aware of the larger scheme, the district court did not err in finding that Hartman was liable for the entire loss suffered by the NYCCFB."); United States v.
