I got back from my trip to NY today. I had such a great time it is really depressing to be back home. I feel like it was a trip that changed my whole outlook on life. I guess I always feel that way a little bit when I get back from trips - but it is overwhelming this time. I am so ready to be out of high school and in college. Everything seems so silly, - going out, etc. - it did a little before anyway - I even feel a little isolated from my friends. Before I left I was on a high of how great my friends were. I still realize how wonderful they are but I feel more independent - like they aren't necessary. I felt like this when I got back from Mexico and it faded quickly but I have a feeling it is different this time. New York is such an amazing city. I felt really comfortable there - like I knew that I belonged there & would live there at some point (hopefully soon). I miss [REDACTED] so much already it seems unfair that I can't see her more often. I feel like I'm missing so much. There is so much to tell about the trip I don't know where to begin. The best night was when [REDACTED] & I saw Phantom of the Opera - We went to Jeff Epstein's house & had champagne w/him. I found him down to earth & easy to talk to. I thanked him so much for the trip, etc. We then took

88 his car - his driver actually took us - to Phantom. I didn't know any play could be so moving. I had seen it before but still couldn't believe it. I yelled - it was fantastic.
After the play we walked around the Plaza and went home. It was so much fun.

I met DOJ REDACTION boyfriend Jeffrey Mendelson.
he was different than I expected - pretty cute, nice, but they didn't get along very well for at the beg. which made me annoyed w/ him. he turned out to be pretty cool once he chilled out.
His brother Eric was 25 and we hung out w/ him a lot.

the 4 of us went to their cabin.
We had a lot of fun - X-country skied, watched Sleuth (~~~~ movie) & hung out.

[REDACTED]
[REDACTED] I didn't see him again until Friday we went to a club to watch some bands, to a bar
